THE WALTER A. WOOD HARVESTING MACHINES

Take the Lead.

In 1853, 500 Machines were sold.
In 1881, 40,413 were sold, and
47,000 have been ordered for 1882.

But the NE PLUS ULTRA of Harvesting Machinery is the Wood Twine Binder. This machine was first put upon the market in 1880, and 4,184 machines were sold that year. In 1881, the sales swelled to 10,084, and orders for over 12,000 have already been received for 1882.

THE WOOD TWINE BINDER!

Possesses these special points of excellence:

1—It is the most perfect automatic self binder ever made.
2—It effects a positive separation of the bound from the unbound grain.
3—The sheaf is formed and compressed without any strain on the twine until the knot is tied.
4—The grain is straightened by the action of the packer as it enters the binder.
5—The automatic uniform sizing of the bundle, thus relieving the driver of the care of stopping and starting the binder.

Last year's machines proved such a perfect success that they will be built substantially the same for 1882, with such improvements in minor details as may be found necessary.

Every farmer desiring to buy a self binder should examine the Wood Twine Binder before purchasing.

Every Machine Sold is WARRANTED!

"A CELEBRATED CASE."

Probably the most popular of the many emotional and sensational plays of this era is the favorite and interesting drama "A Celebrated Case" by the author of the "Two Orphans."—The N. Y. Herald pronounces it "the grandest of modern plays." It has just closed a long engagement at Haverly's theatre New York, where hundreds of people were nightly turned away. After the N. Y. engagement terminated several companies were organized to play the piece throughout the west under the auspices of A. M. Palmer, of the Union Square Theatre. On April 5th the Lee & Rix, all Star company, will produce this thrilling and affecting drama at the Tecumseh Opera House on which occasion a full house may be looked for. This company is composed of first-class artists and they will bring with them their own scenery which is entirely new and was painted for them by the eminent scienic artists Losman & Landis, of New York. Turn out every one and see a fine play by a fine acting company.

REGULAR communication of Tecumseh Lodge, No. 89, F. & A. M. will be held to-morrow evening.—Work in the 3rd degree. Let there be a full attendance.

THE Lilta concert at Adrian will come off on Tuesday evening of next week, April 4th. Train on the Jackson branch will be held until after the concert.

Lighten the burden of life, make success certain and your calculations accurate, by using Brown's Iron Bitters. It strengthens mind and body.

THE latest swindle is as follows:—Agents—they always suit under this flag—are going about among the farmers selling carpets at very low figures, taking therefore what the farmers consider to be only an order. Soon after the supposed 'orders' develope into negotiable notes, and they are presented for collection to the swindled and amazed maker, who has neither remedy nor recourse, but can only foot the bill.

We hope the residents of this township, both villagers and farmers will favor the raising of a special tax at the town meeting next Monday, with which to gravel Chicago turnpike.—We believe it would be a profitable investment to gravel every road in the township, but as there must be a beginning it would probably be policy to take the principal thoroughfare first. If persons who feel interested in this enterprise will call a public meeting at some convenient place next Saturday it would afford the taxpayers an opportunity to discuss the subject and adopt some plan of action which would undoubtedly result in accomplishing the desired object.—Who will open the ball?

Rev. Grandy's Resignation Accepted.

At a meeting of the First Presbyterian church and society held after morning service at the church Sunday, March 26, 1882, H. C. Conkling was elected Moderator and C. A. Slayton Secretary.

DEAR BRETHREN.—From a sense of duty to myself and family I hereby ask you to release me from work as pastor of this church, to take effect not later than the 1st of May next. With kindest feelings to all and prayer for God's blessing on all the interests of Zion here, Yours with respect and christian regard. WM. GRANDY.

March 25, 1882.

The following resolutions were offered and adopted:

WHEREAS, The Rev. Wm. Grandy, our pastor, deeming himself providentially thereto directed, has tendered his resignation, and thereby designs to close his pastoral work with us during the course of the ensuing month of April. Therefore

Resolved, That the church and society, having considered the motives of duty which inclines him to this course, on our part deeply regretting the necessity of this action, do hereby accept such resignation to take effect as its terms indicate.

Resolved, Further that we do most cordially and with christian sympathy, accord to Mr. Grandy our satisfaction with the zeal and christian fidelity which has characterized his labors with us; and we do most cheerfully bespeak for him a hearty welcome by, and earnestly pray for his usefulness among the people by whom we trust he is being providentially called to labor.

There being no further business to come before the meeting, motion to adjourn prevailed.

C. A. SLAYTON, Sec'y.

OBITUARY.

It is not often that parents are more sorely afflicted than have been Mr. & Mrs. Philip S. DePuy, during the past few days. They have been called upon to bury their oldest and youngest daughters, Mrs. H. Eliza Butler, of Mason, and Mrs. Emma C. Keith, of Pittsford, whose deaths took place within four days of each other.

Mrs. Keith's health had been far from robust for a year, but no danger was anticipated until the last six weeks, during which time she rapidly failed from the effects of bronchial disease. While she was lying very low and her friends knew that death was inevitable, a telegram announced that Mrs. Butler had been stricken with apoplexy. Mr. DePuy hastened to Mason, but his daughter was unconscious, and died Wednesday morning, March 22, at the age of 39 yrs. She leaves a husband and four children. The funeral services were held at the Baptist church in Mason, on Thursday at 1 o'clock P. M., the pastor officiating.

Mr. DePuy returned on Friday only to find what he so much feared, tha the end of Mrs. Keith's sickness would soon be reached. His fears were realized, and she died on Saturday afternoon at four o'clock. Her sickness, although painful was borne with submission, and alleviated by the bright hope that she had in the eternal world. At the early age of 23 she leaves a husband and little boy to mourn an irreparable loss. Rev. C. E. Conley officiated at the funeral ceremony which took place at the residence of her father on Monday, at one o'clock P.M. The floral offerings were beautiful and appropriate. The remains were buried in our village cemetery.

Now who is Ahead?

ST. PAUL, Minn., March 23.—The visit of Mr. Chas. Calahan, of Chicago, to this city and Minneapolis to-day was, it is understood, for the purpose of demanding of the Minneapolis harvester works in the name of C. H. McCormick, of Chicago, Norman C. Thompson and Helen A. Gorham, of Rockford, Ill., a royalty of ten dollars upon each twine-binding harvester that said company has made or will make. This claim is based upon patents which, after several years of controversy in the patent office, were in 1880 granted to Marquis L. Gorham, of Rockford, and it is claimed by the parties who demand the royalty that they own and control all the patents relating to the automatic binding of the bundles of grain. The Minneapolis harvester-works, the William Deering company of Chicago, the Champion reaper company of Springfield, Ohio, and the Esterly harvester company of Whitewater, and all others that are using twine-binders made under the Appleby patents, are to be proceeded against by the parties controlling the Gorham patents. The attorneys who have been engaged by the McCormick faction are George Harding, of Philadelphia, E. N. Dickerson of New York, M. D. Leggett of Cleveland, O., and Parkinson & Parkinson, Cincinnati.—Chicago Times.

Worth a Dozen Dead Men.

RICHMOND, VA., May 20, 1881.

My physician, after exhausting me financially, cooly informed me that my case was hopeless, that no remedy would reach my case, and it was entirely useless for me to continue taking medicine. I was told that one lung was gone, and that my bowels and kidneys were all decayed. I suffered excruciatingly from the horrors of dyspepsia and painful urination, and my breath came short and quick, while my heart at times ceased to beat entirely, while again it would thump most vehemently. A sister of mine a Mrs. Rhorer, in Baltimore, wrote to father advising him to get me Brown's Iron Bitters. From the very first dose I felt a change: now all pain is gone, my digestion is good, my urine is free from sediment, and my slumber unbroken and dreamless. I now feel perfectly restored, and go about and do as much work as ever I did, and I do not feel the least fatigued.

DANIEL R. MCKINZIE.

The Oriental Casket.

The March number, being number three of the Oriental Casket, a new literary monthly, is upon our table.—It is a handsome 16 page magazine, edited by Emerson Bennett, the well-known writer, and published by L. Lum Smith, publisher of the Agents' Herald. It is replete with sketches and reading miscellany. The articles are bright and newsy, the puzzle department in good hands, and the new candidate for popular favor will meet with a warm reception. The price is $2 per year. Address L. Lum Smith, 912 Arch St., Philadelphia.

DAVID JONES has opened rooms over Clark's store where he will do all kinds of tailoring, cutting, repairing cleaning, etc. His friends are requested to call upon him in his new quarters.

A DONATION visit for the benefit of Rev. R. S. Pardington will be held at the M. E. church on Thursday evening of next week, April 6th. The public are cordially invited to attend.

FROM THE OLD WORLD.

STEAM YACHT "CEYLON," BAY OF BENGAL,
1st mo., 21st, 1882.

Left Bombay on Friday, and arrived at Columbo on the island of Ceylon on the morning of 5th day the 12th, having had a good rest after the excitement at Bombay, and were all ready for the wonders of Ceylon's lovely isle. It looked so attractive in the morning, sun, we hurried on to make the most of our two days here. My diary says, how am I ever to record the fullness of wonder, admiration and happiness that has been crowded into these two days of tropical enjoyment. We have breathed the spicy breezes of its wonderful climate and its productions, have gazed with admiration upon its enchanting scenery, embracing fertile plains, rounded hills, mountain peaks, paddy-fields, (rice plantations) jungles, coffee and tea plantations, never-ending cocoanut groves, cinnamon gardens and hedges of flowering shrubs, among which the Lantana flourished in abundance. The tall crimson heliescus, very showy, the ponsetta, bourgauvilla and begonias, accacias and mimosa everywhere.

We made a trip of seven miles up into the country to Kandy, the summer capitol of Ceylon, situated among the hills, 1600 ft. above the level of the sea, a most charming little spot. The Queen's hotel, standing on a beautiful little lake, with promenade and drive all around it. The Governor's residence and many fine villas dotting the hills, but all so enveloped in foliage could scarcely see them. The scenery along the railway was magnificent. The only regret we had to feel was that we could not remain there a month. Visited a Buddhist temple, a library containing books written on strips of palm leaf and enclosed in solid silver covers, a botanical garden full of wonderful vegetation rare to all and unknown to most of our company. I had seen nearly all in the West Indies. We had to tear ourselves away at 2½ P. M., coming to the low lands as the sun was setting and the air cooling. After a perilous voyage of two miles, over a very rough sea to our ship, we were on board about 7 o'clock where dinner awaited us. When rowing out to the ship against the tide, it was so rough most of our company wanted to turn back. I could see no use in that as we had made nearly half the distance, and our ship was to sail at 9, so I said go on, and we went and got safely on board, though our four gentlemen said they should have turned back had it not been for me. Others of the company who came off after us got pretty wet, but we did not at all. The next morning we found ourselves at Point de Galle, the meeting place for India and Australian steamers. A quaint little old town surrounded by a heavy wall of Dutch virgin. We drove out several miles on a very good road to Wackwalla, a high point where we got a fine and extensive view of surrounding country. The ship sailed at 5 P. M. The next day was Sunday and we were all glad of a day of rest. Arrived at Madras at 1 o'clock on 3d day (17th,) quite rested up and ready for another cruise on shore, but Madras does not offer much attractions after what we had seen. The variety of people and costumes being the most interesting. I spent a day driving about, seeing the famous tigers, and other things. It is a large city with various temples, Buddhist, Hindoo, &c., but it is on very low ground and shows well from the water. While wandering through the market at Madras, what do you think I came upon reminding me of home? A great basket of popped corn. Of course I bought some, to the wonderment of my young English companion who had never seen the like before. And when we were at Kandy the English were delighted with the fire-flies, (like ours) never having seen any before. Now we are having five continuous days at sea, hoping to land at Calcutta Sunday evening. At Calcutta will be the last place I shall post letters by way of England. Henceforth send them eastward via. San Francisco.

am on land at Calcutta, all right, only when I come up the long flight of steps my head feels as if it were still on the ship and I reel and put out my hand for the baluster, which I seldom do when I am on the ship, even when she is rolling. So much for getting accustomed to unnatural things, that natural ones seem wrong. Yesterday was First day with us, I suppose you are having yours to-day. As we were floating on the "sacred waters" of the Ganges, (sacred to the Hindoos) with its low, level shores in sight and luxuriant vegetation, we did little but look out upon one side and the other, seeming little like the Sabbath, though there was a short service as usual at 11 A. M. Arrived at our moorings last evening, and the mosquitoes poured in upon us as we had heard they would. I have not yet seen anything of Calcutta, but it seems to be spread over a vast expanse with more gardens, commons and vacant space than city.

THE entertainment for the benefit of the Presbyterian church next Tuesday evening at the Opera House will consist of the following program:

Tales of the Second Empire.

I have wandered some distance from the vanished imperial court, of whose doings I will add one anecdote more. Among its reigning belles was numbered a beautiful foreign lady who one day had the misfortune to lose her only sister. Numbers of lofty titled people attended the funeral. The bereaved beauty, overwhelmed by her grief, sat throughout the whole of the ceremony in an attitude expressive of crushed and hopeless sorrow. Half strangled with [illegible] from [illegible] her [illegible] and [illegible] grief of her pose and [illegible] [illegible] all [illegible]. But [illegible] for her, the undertaker's [illegible] [illegible] with [illegible] for the [illegible] the day before, had witnessed the careful removal of that [illegible] [illegible], as expressive of [illegible] [illegible], and they told what they had seen, to the intense delight of the lady's [illegible] — and what beauty is ever without them?

Then, too, they tell the story of a fair American damsel who had been treated with a good deal of favor by the emperor and empress, and who walked up to [illegible] during a position as one of the [illegible] [illegible], and [illegible] a favor in the form of an [illegible] with the remark: "[illegible] home, and let us have a good [illegible]." The emperor turned as black as the young lady without answering, and from that day forward she never again received an invitation to the Tuileries. It fared even worse with her than it did with Mrs. Langtry when that lady slipped a piece of ice down the [illegible] of a [illegible] prince of Wales, for she asked pardon and was forgiven.—Paris Letter.

Newspapers as Foot Wraps.

Complaining of the misery of a long journey in cold weather without any foot-warmers in the carriage, and the consequent pain of cold feet, she told me that she had a practical lesson given her by a well-known Times correspondent on that very matter. They were making a long journey together in bitter weather, and could get no hot water tins put into their carriage. He at once told her not to regret the deficiency, for his newspaper would more than compensate for it. So he took of her boots, and tearing his paper in halves, wrapped each foot carefully up in it. In a few minutes circulation seemed to return to her benumbed feet, and she assured me that she arrived at the end of her journey in perfect comfort, and with warm feet. Such a lesson was not to be forgotten, and my friend told me that she has resorted to the same expedient several times with like results. I account for the fact by the same reasons I have given for the extra warmth of morning generally. The [illegible] of warm air [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] paper [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] with a [illegible] of [illegible].

Tapestry Painting.

Tapestry painting may be regarded much in the same light as water-color drawing: the lights are left clear, no white being used; one color is softened into another, and in such blending of shades consists the great charm of the painting. All tints dry lighter than when first washed in; two, and sometimes three washes are necessary before the requisite depth of tint is obtained; allowance must therefore be made for the absorption of the canvas in preparing a shade. The best plan is to mix, in cups or saucers, different strengths of the colors for the several washes. Darker shades should be put on first, as [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]. If the light colors are washed first the dark shades run into them and [illegible] [illegible] far. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Words and Phrases Used by Stock Brokers and Speculators.

Bear market—When the market is heavy and falling, and lower prices are expected in consequence of the efforts of the "bears."

Bear the market—i. e., operate for a decline. A bear is naturally "short" of stocks, and expecting to profit by a decline.

Borrowing and loaning stocks—When a party has sold stock short and has not bought it in by the time delivery must be made, he "borrows" the stock for the purpose of making a delivery, paying the owner the market price at the time, and agreeing to return it at the same price on demand, or at a fixed time, the lender of the stock paying the borrower an agreed rate of interest on the money, or the borrower paying the lender an agreed premium for the use of the stock, as the case may be.

Cover, to "cover one's shorts"—Where stock has been sold short and the seller buys it in to realize his profit, or to protect himself from loss, or to make his delivery. This is "covering short sales."

A call—The privilege obtained, for a consideration, of calling for a certain number of shares of stock, at a given price, within a time named.

Corners—When the market is oversold, the shorts, if compelled to deliver sometimes find themselves in a "corner."

Curbstone brokers—Men who are not members of any regular organization and do business mainly upon the sidewalk.

Lamb—A very green "outsider" who essays stock speculation.

Limited order—An order to buy and sell within a certain fixed price, above or below which the party giving the order does not wish to go.

Margins—Where one buys or sells for speculation, and deposits with his broker a percentage of value to enable the latter to "carry" the stock and protect him against loss from fluctuations in value.

Milking the street—The act of cliques or great operators who hold certain stocks so well in hand that they cause any fluctuations they please. By alternately lifting and depressing prices, they "milk" the small operators and the outside public.

Put—To buy a "put" is to obtain the right, for a consideration, to deliver a stock at a certain agreed price within a given number of days.

Stop order—An order to sell out a stock in case it should decline to a certain price, or to buy in short stock in case it should advance to a certain price. A means adopted by a party "long" or "short" of a stock to limit his loss to a certain figure.

Turning stocks—Consists in buying for cash or regular way, and selling a like amount of the same stock at the same time, on "option," thereby making 6 per cent. interest and any difference that may exist at the time between the market price of the stock for cash and on option; or selling for cash and buying on option, when the stock is hard to carry and the holder, hoping for a rise, does not want to get out of it.

Twist on the shorts—A clique phrase used where the shorts have oversold heavily, and the market has been suddenly advanced, compelling them to settle at ruinous rates, or when stocks are withdrawn from the loan market and made difficult to borrow except at a large premium for the use.

Washing—Is where one broker arranges with another to buy a certain stock when he offers it for sale. The bargain is fictitious, and the effect, when not detected, is to keep it quoted and afford a basis for bona-fide sales. It is not countenanced by the rules of the exchange, and if discovered renders members engaged in it liable to the penalty of expulsion.

The First Saw Mills.

The old practice of making boards was to split up the logs with wedges, and, inconvenient as the practice was, it was no easy matter to persuade the world that the thing could be done in any better way. Sawmills were first used in Europe in the 15th century, but so late as 1655, an English embassador, having seen a sawmill in France thought it a novelty which deserved particular description. It is amusing to note how the aversion to labor-saving machinery has always agitated England. The first sawmill was established by a Dutchman, in 1663; but the public outcry against the new fangled machine was so violent that the proprietor was forced to decamp with greater expedition that ever did a Dutchman before. The evil was thus kept out of England for several years, or rather generations, but in 1768 an unlucky timber merchant, hoping that after so long a time the public would be less watchful of its interests, made a rash attempt to construct another mill. The guardians of the public welfare, however, were on the alert, and a conscientious mob at once collected and pulled the mill to pieces.—S. J. Machinist.

Indulgent parents who allow their children to eat heartily of high-seasoned food, rich pies, cake, &c., will have to use Hop Bitters to prevent indigestion, sleepless nights, sickness, and perhaps death. No family is safe without them in the house.

SET THE CHILDREN TO WORK.—Even the youngest member of the family should have something given him to do. "The chores," which the country boys and girls do, thereby relieve their overworked elders, are not only an assistance in the household, but a means of education, and it is important that those families who unfortunately live in the city should find for their children something to take the place of this means of education.

"Rough on Rats."

The thing desired found at last.—Ask Druggists for "Rough on Rats." It clears out rats, mice, roaches, flies, bed bugs. 15cs boxes.

READ THIS STORY, BOYS!

"Gentlemen," said a repentant drinking man, at a temperance meeting held in——, during the Murphy excitement, "gentlemen, it has cost me $10,000 to bring my nose to its present state of perfection." $10,000! And what did he have besides his red nose? An aching and remorseful heart, a pain-racked and diseased body; a home where a miserable woman probably dragged a lonely life among a world full of hopeless apathy, crushed and bowed to the earth by the shame of being a drunkard's wife. "$10,000!" wrote the recording angel, and turned in stern sorrow from the page. "$10,000!" chuckled the rum-seller; "I am that much richer—am I not a lucky man?" "$10,000!" said the devil; "what a fool! I'll have him surely, if he doesn't look out." "$10,000" whispered a little boy away back in the corner, whose father was killed in a drunken brawl, "$10,000 would make my mother happy, and I wouldn't have to sell newspapers for a living, and stay out of school when my heart is hungry for books." "$10,000!" soliloquized the young man who drank a little, "I can't afford that." And he signed the pledge, though he didn't mean to.

The confession was like a spark that sprang into the flame, and ran with vivid tongues of fire through the vast audience. The little boy went forward with the throng with all the manliness of twenty-five. He wrote his name as well as he could, and proudly took his pledge card. When he thought himself unnoticed he wrote slyly on its back, "Ten thousand dollars saved for mother by not drinking." That was exactly the way he wrote it, so you need not laugh. Maybe his own father had wasted as much over his cups, and now his child had no time to learn to spell. He was busy all day at anything to turn an honest penny, and nights, poor little fellow, he was too tired and sleepy to even look at a book.

How do I know what he wrote? In passing out his precious card was brushed from his hand. He could not go back, for the throng pressed on.

It was picked up by the janitor, given to one of the officers in charge; was next day posted on an immense blackboard, and served as a text for one of the most magnificent lectures of the course. What a lot of wet handkerchiefs there were when the speaker was through! How red the ladies' eyes were—almost as red as the drunkard's nose! And Jimmy—there, I didn't mean to tell one bit of his name—who had stolen back to get his treasured card, and to see if he could sell a few books and papers, trembled like a leaf with excitement, to think he was the hero of all that grand talk, and the color went in and out of his cheeks with just that quiver you have seen in the sky when the northern lights wave and tremble. By and by the gentleman called his name, and somebody put him on the platform, and then there was such a stamping and clapping as you never heard of before in your life. And how did it all end? Why, good people interested themselves in the child and its mother, and Jimmy goes to school now and his mother is matron in a "Temperance House;" and some day, if you don't study hard, boys, Jimmy will be at the top of the ladder while you are just beginning to climb. I want you to remember the man—for he was a real, living man—who said: "It cost me $10,000 to bring my nose to its present state of perfection;" and think of the boy, a drunkard's orphan, who resolved to save $10,000 for his mother "by not drinking;" and if you are tempted to drink, see if you cannot make and keep as good a resolution.—Mrs. G. W. White.

Mormonism.

Over the gate of Brigham Young's grounds in Salt Lake City there is a rude representation of an eagle striking its talons into a bee-hive. This is an excellent symbol of Mormonism—rapacity preying on industry! I have much sympathy with the bee-hive; none at all with the eagle. I pity the Mormon people; and because I foresee for the basin region a great future, I wish the talons of the voracious hierarchy to be taken swiftly out of the honey gathered in Utah by the energy of these peasants brought over from Europe. But the symbol above the gate is not complete. You must wind around that humming straw-hive some emblem of the Mormon secret, deadly police. Let a viper with poisonous fangs coil around the hive, and take his directions from the eagle above him, and your symbol is more perfect than it was; and yet it is not complete.

You must add the bird of the night, the owl, which often lives, it is said, in the same hole with the rattlesnake. This winged creature will represent the subtlest misleading element in Mormonism—priestly fanaticism, the solemn pretense of possessing individual access to God's secrets, personal inspiration, the idea that God speaks through the prophets, and the revelator and seer at the head of the Mormon hierarchy. There is one other bird that must be added, and the symbol will be completed—the strutting barn yard fowl, emblem of polygamy. Mormonism is the poultry philosophy. The Latter-Day swindle arranges human beings as if they were poultry! It gives women, not a home, but a harem and a coop.—Joe Cook.

How the Supreme Court is Opened.

To begin with, says the Washington Star, there is a degree of dignity and stately bearing about the court and its members which permeates even to the most humble attaché. There is a quiet in the courtroom which recalls the Sabbath of the Covenanters. When one enters, the involuntary feeling comes on that the room is set aside only for the contemplation of the sober side of life, and woe to him who jibes and jokes in the presence of the court. At 12 o'clock (noon) the justices come in from the consulting-room and take their seats on the bench. Away to the left of the chamber is seen a youthful officer, whose business is to catch the first glimpse of the advancing judges. Then comes three raps with a ponderous gavel by the same officer. This is meant as a signal for the audience to rise. Then, with the chief justice in advance, the judges enter from the right of the chamber. To the rear of the justices' seat is an aisle. In the centre is an arched entrance for the chief justice. Through this aisle the judges file and take positions on the right and left. None enter until the chief justice emerges from the centre entrance. After all have filed in, the chief justice makes a graceful obeisance to the standing audience. Then the judges take seats, a stroke of the gavel is made, and the audience seats itself. The opening of the court falls upon a youthful officer. It is after the old English form. "Oh, yes; oh, yes," etc., and concludes with the word, "God bless the honorable supreme court." The court is now ready for business. All the justices are clad in black silk gowns with an exclesiastical cut.

DOWNS' ELIXIR.

N. H. DOWNS' Vegetable Balsamic ELIXIR

This valuable medicine is purely vegetable the discovery of which was the result of many years' close study, in order to discover the cause, the symptoms, and the cure—viz: Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Catarrh, Croup, Asthma, Pleurisy, Hoarseness, Influenza, Spitting Blood, Bronchitis, and every species of oppression of the Chest and Lungs. In all cases where this Elixir has been duly administered its efficacy has been invariably manifested, convincing the most incredulous that is not incurable, if properly attended to—Consumption, at its commencement, is but a slight irritation of the membrane which covers the Lungs; then an inflamation, when the cough is more observable, but rather dry; then becomes local fever and the pulse more frequent, the cheeks flushed and chillness commences. This Elixir in curing the above complaints, operates so as to remove all morbid irritations and inflamation from the lungs to the surface, and finally expel them from the system. It facilitates expectoration.

It heals the ulcerated surfaces and relieves the cough and makes the breathing easy. It supports the strength and at the same time reduces the fever. It is free from strong opiate and astringent articles, which are of so drying a nature as to be in great danger of destroying the patient; whereas this medicine never dries or stops the cough, but, by removing the cause, generally destroys the hectic before the cough is entirely gone. Consequently, when the cough is cured the patient is well. Send address for pamphlet giving full directions for cure of pulmonary diseases. Price 35 cts., 50 cts., and $1.00 per bottle.

MORTGAGE SALE.

ON the twentieth day of April, 1872, Peter Van Eps, and Nancy Van Eps, his wife, mortgaged to Elihu L. Clark all those tracts or parcels of land situate in the township of Hudson in the county of Lenawee and state of Michigan, bounded and described as follows, to wit: Being village lot number five (5) on Laird's addition to the village of Hudson, being situated on section nineteen in said township of Hudson. Also one other piece or parcel of land situate in the village of Hudson, county of Lenawee, and state of Michigan, described as situated on section nineteen in said township, commencing on the north line of land deeded by Ann H. Cobb to Robert Laird, and sixteen rods west of the west division of fractional section nineteen and running thence northerly and parallel with the west line of said section to the southern angle line of land deeded by Harvey Cobb to David Pratt, and running thence easterly on said Pratt's line till it intersects the east line of land now owned by John W. Pierce; thence southerly till it reaches the southeast corner of said Pierce's lot; thence westerly on the south line of said Pierce's lot to a point four rods west of the place first above described and thence to the place of beginning; thence easterly on a line parallel with the first described line to the north line of Robert Laird's land at a point four rods west of the place of beginning; thence easterly on said Laird's north line to the place of beginning, to secure the payment of one hundred and twenty-six dollars and the interest in said mortgage mentioned, which said mortgage was on the 23d day of April, 1872, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Lenawee county in Liber U of mortgages, on folios 276, 277 and 278. The mortgage was on the 25th day of October, 1877, duly assigned by said Elihu L. Clark to John M. Osborn, which assignment was on the 25th day of October, 1877, duly recorded in said Register's office in Liber 30 of mortgages, on pages 708 and 709. Default has been made in the conditions of said mortgage by the non-payment of the moneys due thereon, by which the power of sale therein contained has become operative. There is now claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage the sum of two hundred and fourteen and seventy-five hundredths dollars, and no proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover said sum or any part thereof. Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained, and the statute in such case made and provided, I will sell at public vendue to the highest bidder at the front door of Dean's opera house in the city of Adrian, in said county of Lenawee, (that being the place of holding the circuit court in and for said county,) on the first day of May, 1882, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, the land above and in said mortgage described, or so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy the amount then due on said mortgage, the costs of this foreclosure and sale and a reasonable sum of money for an attorney fee as provided for in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

Dated January 26th, 1882.

FARMERS' CLUB.

The last meeting of the season was held at R. B. Gillespie's March 24th. The meeting was a fit ending for a successful season. The house was filled with a happy crowd, all seeming intent upon enjoying the last evening to the utmost. The program was quite lengthy but so varied and well carried out that it was not wearisome. Just before supper a company of young girls gave an exhibition of the broom drill—Miss Fred Griswold as captain.

Supper being announced, the tables were soon surrounded, and the committee were kept busy supplying coffee and oysters. The coffee was pronounced excellent, the oysters just right, the biscuit and cake fully up to the standard for which the matrons in the Tecumseh and Clinton Farmers' Club are noted. The arrangements of the supper were given to the young people and they are entitled to much credit for the successful manner in which they were carried out. By the time the last tables were served the hour hand pointed near midnight and the meeting adjourned to meet at Sand Lake some time in June.

Mrs. F. C. Rector, Mrs. J. Fisher, Mrs. Geo. Griswold, Mr. I. H. Schreder, Mr. J. W. Benedict, and Mr. E. L. Russell were appointed a committee to make arrangements for the June meeting.

Adrian Record: John Moriarty, of Medina, whose farm Navin mortgaged, has this little story to tell: Sometime subsequent to the date of the forged mortgage, Moriarty had occasion for more money than he could command, and concluded that he had better raise it by a mortgage. So he naturally sought his friend Navin, who was advertising money to loan, and stated his desire to mortgage his farm for $800. He found Navin unexpectedly kind. Quoth Tom: "Now Moriarty, I wouldn't mortgage my farm if I were you. Don't do it. I will lend you the money without any mortgage" This was an unexpected piece of good luck, and Tom gave the honest Irishman the money, accepting his note in return. Moriarty paid it at maturity, like a man, and all the while was ignorant of the mortgage, in the hands of E. L. Clark.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

BROOKLYN.

Brooklyn wielded the owl club on Tuesday evening in behalf of the Methodist society and left eighteen dollars with Dr. Jones to help build a chapel. As usual the Baptist church was the gathering place, where each did well in his degree; and by that you will understand that the Owls are sentenced to sing again and as many, perhaps more, will go to listen.

The closing exercises of this school were largely attended, and, though I was not present, the names of Carrie Ambler and Matie Adams are so often repeated I conclude judgment is rendered in their favor.

The Jefferson school is taught by Aggie Jones, also of Brooklyn, and people were so well pleased with the exhibition she exhibited that they induced her to repeat it next evening.—At the present time she is undecided whether to continue the play acting or begin school again Monday morning.

The temperance field is well patronized thus far. The landlords are pulling down barns to build greater, disturbing rat retreats, and getting up a general spring fandango, that makes one enjoy peace more particularly when its over with.

Aside from this the District Fair fever is increasing, and if the gentlemen cannot wait until they can occupy the grounds the ladies may conclude to hold a baby show, and the children display a doll and kitten collection during intermission.

PEARLIE.

CLINTON.

Mrs. George Clark has opened a millinery establishment in the rooms formerly occupied by Miss Ida Howell.

Mrs. Stewart, of Illinois, mother of Dr. Alvord, has been visiting here several days.

Prof. W. W. Wendell, superintendent of the public shools of Hudson, was in town over Sunday.

Miss Lulu W. Whittelsey, of Ypsilanti, and Mrs. Knapp, of Chelsea, are visiting their brother, W. S. Whittlesey.

Miss Carrie Muir, who for several months has been clerking in E. A. Clark's shoe store, has given up her position.

The confirmation services last Thursday evening, at the Episcopal church, were very interesting. The class contained eight members.

At this writing (Tuesday), Mr. John P. Silvers, is seriously ill. His friends feel very much alarmed at his condition.

Mrs. Bodine, of this place, died last week at the residence of her brother, Mr. Nelson Miller, of Ridgeway. The remains were brought here for burial last Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. J. E. McCollum have given up housekeeping, and will board at the Silvers House. Mr. George Fleming will occupy the house they have vacated.

Dr. Strong is now to be found in his rooms over the store of John H. Miller & Co. C. K. Spafford has moved his family into the building the doctor recently vacated.

Miss Nellie Hark has been quite sick for several days, but is now better and able to go out again. She has been called to her eastern home and will leave here in about two weeks. The many young friends she has made during the few months she has lived here will sincerely regret her departure.

After a week's vacation the last term of the school year has opened, though with not as large an attendance as there was through the winter term. We hope the remainder of the year will pass pleasantly for both teachers and pupils, nothing occuring to break in upon the peace and harmony, which is so very essential to a good school.

The election was not very exciting and a light vote was polled. The entire Democratic ticket was elected, with majorities as follows: Supervisor—J.W. Beadner, 50; Town Clerk—John Hause, Jr., 36; Treasurer—A. B. Van De Mark, 40; Justice of the Peace—George Bunyan, 26; Highway Commissioner—Edward D. Slivers, 50; Drain Commissioner—Phillip Kehoe, 43; School Inspector—Charles F. Field (two years,) 37; Bryan O. Randall (one year,) 35; Constables—J.C. Burroughs, 53; Porter C. Smith, 39; Walter H. Smith, 42; Franklin D. Lancaster, 40.

FRANKLIN.

Mattie Bidel has moved in William Lambkin's tenant house.

Miss Etta Wilson, one of Franklin's most efficient teachers has been engaged to teach in the public schools of Tecumseh.

Herbert Belden and sister, of Otsego, are at their old home visiting for a few days. Herbert is employed in a chair factory.

John B. Whelan, formerly of the university, has severed his connection with that school, and will study law in an office at Detroit.

Last Sabbath evening Mr. Dickey, of Charlotte, and Mr. Chrosier, of Ann Arbor, talked on temperance, with a view of organizing a Good Templar's Lodge, but their efforts were unavailing.

Mr. Mansfield removes to Adrian this week, where he intends to engage in the grocery business on a larger scale. Mr. Mansfield has won many friends while in this place that will mourn his loss. Last Sabbath evening the Congregatiynal society extended a vote of thanks for his services in the choir.

The election passed off very quietly, the Republicans electing their ticket with the exception of justice for full term, and drain commissioner.

A comparatively light vote was cast, with three tickets in the field, which gave the following result:

MACON.

THE Anti-Monopoly ticket in Macon was partially successful. It was composed of a coalition of Republicans and Democrats who think alike on the great question of monopoly. They elected supervisor, clerk, drain commissioner and one constable. The Republicans carried the rest of the ticket. The following are the officers chosen with the majorities of each:

The widow of Commodore Vanderbilt will soon be married to Dr. Nathan Roysman, manager of one of the large charity hospitals of New York.

At St. James, Missouri, J. H. Bowman, late judge of Phelps county, fired a load of buckshot into the body of Alfred Hayes.

Gilley Bondick, a noted desperado of Virginia, was killed near Lemont by Ben Young, his rival for the affections of a woman.

In the Massachusetts house, Wednesday, a prohibitory liquor bill was only defeated by the refusal of Speaker Noyes to vote for it.

The czar ordered the commutation of the death sentences of the nihilists recently convicted, except Lieutenant Sucharoff, who was shot by soldiers.

Edward Peters, who tortured and starved to death a lad of 7 years at Mansonsville, Quebec, has been sentenced to be hanged April 28.

Archer Horn, one of the Iron Mountain train-robbers, has been taken from the Arkansas penitentiary by a guard of officers to point out the hiding-place of part of the treasure stolen.

The Typographical union of Cincinnati, after a session of ten hours, resolved to admit the compositors of The Commercial, imposing on nine offenders a fine of $1 each.

Some Russian representatives are negotiating at Pittsburg for the building of hulls and engines for a number of steamboats, to be shipped in sections and completed on the Volga river.

A man giving the name of James E. Jones surrendered himself at Knoxville, Tenn., as having embezzled $1,000 while money-order clerk in the postoffice at Woodstock, Ill.

Smythe, a rich landlord of West Meath, Ireland, was fired upon while driving home from church, Sunday, and a lady accompanying him received the bullet. A package of dynamite was exploded on the window sill of the police barracks at Limerick, destroying the adjacent warehouse.

The immigration at Castle Garden for the past three months reached the unprecedented figure of 68,653. The controversy in regard to head money has been renewed, the steamship companies offering to pay 25 cents for each immigrant landed, and the commissioners demanding a half-dollar.

John B. Mannix, assignee of Archbishop Purcell, asks of the district court of Hamilton county, Ohio, an order to sell a vast amount of real estate for the benefit of three thousand creditors. The hearing commenced April 4, and may consume six weeks, as each congregation interested has secured an attorney.

Bishop Payne, of the African Methodist church, having been ejected from a first-class car on the Jacksonville road in Florida, the colored people of New York held an indignation meeting and urged that action be brought against the railway and carried to the supreme court of the United States, and that the church raise $25,000 for the contest.

A party of sixteen citizens of Pueblo, Col., at an early hour Friday morning, by deceiving Jailer Strait, got possession of cattle-thieves named Phoebus and McGreu, and hanged them to a tree near by. The vigilantes then rode to a ranch ten miles away, captured the Chastine brothers and an accomplice named Owsby, and strung them up in the adjacent timber. It is stated that but one of the gang is left as a sample, and a necktie is ready for him.

The Western Union Telegraph company has acquired control of the Mutual Union lines. Gould purchased 33,500 shares out-right, and 18,500 shares are held by George Baker, H. C. Fahnstock, and George S. Scott. The three latter hold the balance of power in the company, and have entered into an agreement to act in accord with Gould so long as his policy does not impair the rights and business of the Mutual Union. About $500,000 was paid for the block held by Baker and his partners. General G. M. Dodge and Jay and Geo. Gould will be added to the new board of directors, and John G. Moore will be president.

The steamer Golden City, when approaching the wharf at Memphis Thursday morning, took fire from a lamp and was burned to the water's edge. The crew numbered about sixty, and there were about forty passengers on board. About twenty persons leaped off on a barge and were saved. The loss of life is believed to be twenty-five. Stowe's circus had been taken aboard at Vidalia, La., and nearly all the cages and wagons were burned. The steamer was five years old, and cost $54,000. Among the lost were the wife and three children of Captain Kountz, a noted steamboat owner. Robert Kelly, the second engineer, remained at his post and was cut off by the flames.

Cornelius J. Vanderbilt, one of the sons of the late commodore, shot himself at the Glenham hotel, in New York, Sunday, and died within four hours. It appears that he suffered for years from epileptic fits, and been constantly attended by a companion. He had visited Hot Springs without benefit, and but recently returned from a sojourn in Florida. His financial affairs are said by friends to have been entirely satisfactory to him. It will be remembered that he contested the will of his father, and received $1,000,000 or so from his brother William to compromise the matter. He was 51 years of age.

Stephen A. Hurlbut, minister to Peru, died at Lima, March 28, of heart disease. He was a native of Charleston, and served as adjutant of a South Carolina regiment in the war with the Seminole Indians. He removed to Belvidere, Ill., in 1845, where he practiced law, and was several times elected to the legislature. In May, 1861, he was commissioned a brigadier general. He took part in the battles of Shiloh and Corinth, and succeeded General Banks in command at New Orleans. He was minister to the United States of Colombia during President Grant's administration, and was then elected to congress. He was appointed minister at Lima by President Garfield, but was about to return on leave of absence to appear before the congressional investigation.

Two.

BY CELIA THAXTER.

She turned the letter's rustling page, a smile
Made bright the air about her while she read:
"I come to you to-morrow, love, meanwhile
Love me, my sweet," he said.

"What other business has my life?" she thought,
And musing passed, as in some happy dream,
To the day's care and toils, and while she wrought
Time winged with light did seem.

To-morrow! When the summer morning broke
In rose and gold and touched her slumbering eyes
Softly, with tempered splendor, and she woke
To the rich dawn's surprise.

Birds sang aloft and roses bloomed below;
Hushed while she listened, fleecy mists above
Came Memory, leading Hope, and whispered low,
"Love me! I come, my love."

"So that time comest," she thought, "skies may grow gray,
The sun may fade, the sea with foam blanch white,
Tempest and thunder dread may spoil the day,
But not my deep delight."

When in the west the sunset's crimson flame
Hurried low and wasted, and the cool winds blew,
Watching the steadfast sky she heard her name
Breathed in the voice she knew.

Her fair cheek borrowed swift the sunset's bloom.
A presence beautiful and stately filled
The silence of the room.

"Hast thou no word of welcome?" for indeed
Like some more marble goddess proud stood she;
She turned, "O king of men!" she cried, "what need
That I should welcome thee?"

Wide swung heaven's gates for them, no more they knew.
The stars looked in on them—they saw them not.
The slow winds wandered soft through dusk and dew,
But earth was all forgot.

THE HAUNTED WELL.

I am an old farmer, living in the oldest house in Oldtown. The trees about the place are the trees of the primæval forest. I have plenty of farming land beyond their delightful shade, and the only thing new upon the place is my well. We have an ancient well with the old-fashioned sweep, but no one ever tastes the water there, though it is as cold and clear as crystal.

I suppose the place is worth a great deal. It was valued at fifteen hundred pounds when I bought it years ago. The house is a handsome mansion: the sort of a place a gentleman retiring from business usually buys to end his days in, and city people come to see it and the grounds, and seem to be delighted. Now, when I tell you that I came into Oldtown with exactly one hundred and twenty pounds in my pocket, and that I had no idea what I should do when that was spent, you will feel surprised that, six months after, I owned this place. But I'll tell you all about it. It was what folks call a haunted place, and for ten years it had stood vacant. People tried to live there, but were always frightened away. If it had been only the house, that could have been torn down; but nobody would even farm the land on shares.

Twelve years before this, the proprietor had been a jealous old gentleman, who had a young wife whom he would never permit out of his sight, if he could avoid it.

However, she was as sly as he was watchful, and she managed to flirt sufficiently to make herself talked about.

Being very pretty, she set one or two silly young fellows wild about her, and one used to follow her around, making great eyes and sighing desperately like a lover in a play.

The postmistress said that he wrote to her, and I suppose he did. And at last the news spread through the place that she had run away with him.

He was gone, and she was gone: and the old man came one morning to Lawyer Tantivy, and sold his property at a great loss to a man who had wanted it for years—a rich man, who liked to have it said that he owned the finest place in Oldtown.

It was plain that the poor old gentleman did not care what became of him, and when he had got the money he wandered away, and was never seen again.

The new proprietor moved up to the great house in state, but at dawn the whole family—servants and all—returned to their old quarters.

What they had seen, or what they had not seen, it was hard to tell, but they were all nearly frightened to death. The doctor was sent for for the ladies, and they spoke of the most awful apparitions.

After this the head of the family and the constable spent a day and a night there. They held their tongues, but those who saw them first knew that they had been well frightened, and the man put the place into the market at once.

Lawyer Tantivy privately told people that only a coward would have been frightened by rats in an old wall, and he sold it to a city man. Much the same thing happened; but this time the house was not sold again. The city man went elsewhere, and tried in vain to get rid of his bargain. It was let for the summer once, but the people did not stay a week. After a while nobody would farm the ground.

Some said they saw a woman with her throat cut. Some that they saw a man with a wound in his breast. Some both. Voices were heard; hands were felt; and there, when I came to the place, the old house stood, with moths and spiders for its only tenants.

I went up and looked at it, and then I talked to Jane. She had not a bit of superstition in her, and she agreed to what I proposed.

I went to old Tantivy and offered him twenty-five pounds a year for a four years' lease of the place, the hundred pounds to be paid in one lump.

"After that," said I, "I'll give you four hundred for the property. Wife and I are not afraid of ghosts."

The old lawyer shook his head.

"You say you've met with losses, friend," said he, "and have just one hundred and twenty pounds left? Keep it. You couldn't live in that house one week. I've tried it. I'd make a bargain with a rich man, but I'm not rascal enough to take a poor man's all."

"I'll risk it," said I. "I do it freely, but the papers must be made out fair and square—four hundred after my four years' lease."

And so I had my way. Jane and I went up to the house one day; I had nineteen pounds in my pocket and a wheelbarrow full of groceries. She carried a broom and a new scrubbing-brush. It was a wonderful, grand, dirty old place. We set to work to clean it—to drive out the insects and the rats; and we got some fresh straw to sleep on, for the beds were all mouldering away. That night at nine we lay down, with a lamp burning, and went to sleep like two tops; and I think it must have been twelve o'clock, or nigh to it, when Jane shook me violently. I started up, and, holding each other's hands, we both saw what had frightened her.

A man stood near the bed, a young man with fair hair curling about his temples; his breast was bare, and we saw a great bleeding wound there. I had my pistol under my pillow, and I drew it out and looked at him.

"Go, or I fire," I said; "I'm not a fool to be tricked in this way."

Instead of obeying, he slowly moved toward the bed. Jane shrieked and drew the counterpane over her head. I covered him with my pistol.

"One step more and I fire," I said.

He took the step. I fired. A shriek of laughter followed, and there was no one there. I arose and searched the place. Every window was barred, every door locked. I unlocked one of the doors, and entered the adjoining room. A great bed, with tester and canopy, stood there, and upon this lay the figure of a woman, all in white, covered with blood. I rushed toward it, lamp in hand. Again those hollow shrieks of laughter, and nothing but the stained and yellow ticking of an old feather-bed lay under the canopy.

"Silas! Silas!" screamed my wife, who had followed me, clinging to my arm. "It is all true. Let us leave the place."

"Jane," said I, "it seems to be true that this place is haunted, but we have risked our all on it. The things we have seen have not hurt us, and I propose to drive them away. I'll take you to the village, if you like, and leave you there to board, but here I stay until I beat these ghosts."

"Not alone," said Jane. And she did not leave me.

If you believe me, friend, day and night for three weeks we were haunted as people never were before—faces, voices, hands—in the house and in the field; and worse than all, we grew sick.

I sent for the doctor, who wouldn't come: and we went to him.

"You are poisoned," he said. "What have you eaten, or what have you been drinking?"

We thought it over, and I told him that we knew of nothing harmful, and that we cooked and prepared all our own food.

"I never knew anyone to pass a day at that confounded house you live in without being affected in this way," said he; "even those who did not eat there. Constable Collins says he touched nothing but cold water, and he came near dying."

"It's the well, then," said I.

"They used to call it the best well in the county," said the doctor.

"It has a nasty taste now," said I. "I'll beg of my neighbors until I've cleaned it out."

And that day I began. We got better slowly, and I tried to hire two farm hands to help me with my well. Not one would be hired. I was weak from sickness, and, to tell the truth, it seemed as if the old boy himself was in the place. I was almost tired of living as I did, and feeling like a maniac; and one day I went down to the well, and sat there, wondering whether it might not be best to give up and go somewhere as farm-laborer, when I felt what seemed to be an icy hand on my head, and, looking up, saw my two ghosts, side by side. They were horrible enough, I can tell you, and they looked at me and pointed into the well; and then I heard two voices crying:

"Get us out! Get us out! Get us out and bury us! The water is cold, and our wounds are deep. Get us out!"

And then the truth came to me, Heaven knows how.

I went over to my neighbor's house, just able to crawl there, and I said to him:

"Mr. Jarvis, will you send one of your men to the people they ought to go to, and have the police sent up to my place? There's something in my well that ought not to be there."

Well, they came, and I was right. They took out of that well two bodies, rolled up in sheet lead. By bits of jewelry, and things of that sort, they found out that they were the bodies of the young wife of the old proprietor and the young man who use to run after her. The old man had killed them both, but he must have had help to bury them in their leaden coffins. And now people began to remember how two roofers, who had a good deal of this sheet lead on hand, grew suddenly well off, and went from the place about the time the old man sold the estate, and they believed that he had paid them for helping him dispose of the bodies.

They buried them in the graveyard, and Jane and I never saw the ghosts again. The farm-land and summer-boarders brought me the price I had agreed upon for the place, and I've been a prosperous man ever since. And if you want anyone to tell you a good genuine ghost story, come to me.

TALLOW CANDLE FISH.—In the waters of British North America, as we are informed, there is a fish, an odd fish, as surprising in its ways as the sea-serpent, and infinitely more useful. It is a species of smelt, and may be poetically described as an aquatic glow-worm. We are told it may be literally used in the same way as a candle, by simply setting a light to the tail, when it will burn with a flame steady as that of the "dips" which our grandfathers used to have to put up with before gas was invented. It is a small silvery fish, averaging about fourteen inches long, is exceedingly fat, and affords an excellent and valuable oil, and is so inflammable that the dried carcass will serve as a torch. Among the natives, the fish is known as the oolahan, and by them, as by others who have tasted it, is considered one of the most delicious products of the sea, being far more delicate in flavor than the herring. The fish are caught in wicker backets, and are smoked as much as their oily nature will allow.

It is useless to deny that the brightest and fairest fall easy victims to consumption, and equally fruitless to ignore the fact that decline has its origin in many cases in neglected catarrh. Sanford's Radical Cure is a pure, sweet balsamic specific.

Wishing and Willing.

Wishing won't do much for anybody in this world. There are a great number of dreamers and visionaries, people who put on the "wishing cap," and desire all sorts of nice things to come to them. They expect gold and all nice things to drop into their lap. But they are mistaken. Wishing won't do much good for any one. The only way to get anything is not to sigh for it with a wish, but to work for it with a will. That is the way, and the only way. The working man knows that. He knows that wishes won't manufacture daily bread for him. He goes out to work with a stout heart, and earns a day's wages with a day's labor. A scholar does not expect to excel and get the highest prize without intense toil. You must work with a will if you would get anything worth having. But it is astonishing what an earnest will can do. Poor boys have become rich men. Ignorant boys have become wise men. Obscure boys who were known only in a village, have come out in the eye of the world, and been known far and wide as distinguished men. They might always have remained in the quiet village, but for this will, which bore them right out of it into the wide world atmosphere.

I'll tell you a story of one who made a name for himself, and gained great renown and great possessions by the simple force of his character. He was diligent, and the hand of the diligent maketh rich; he was energetic, and energy is like an express train; it goes ahead. This boy's ancestors were rich and honored, but they lost their inheritance and became poor. When the boy knew this he was sad, and one day as he wandered alone over the broad lands of his forefathers, he resolved that he would work and struggle with all his might to buy them back again. He didn't sigh and shed tears, and say, "Oh, how I wish that castle were once more mine!" No, he didn't do that, because he knew that tears of regret would not help him in the least. He had his pleasant dreams, as I have told you, but he set himself to work. He brooded over his vision, and it gave strength to his brain, his will, his hand. He knew that everything depended on himself, and on himself he relied. He went abroad to the East Indies, and he himself tells us that during the long voyage this one thought of gaining the ancestral lands possessed him, and fired him with a purpose to achieve renown. He landed in a strange country, without money, without friends. And how did he get on? What was the result? He began life as a humble clerk, and rose rapidly in power, and ceased not in the ascending scale till he became Governor General of all India.

Wishing and willing—you understand the difference now, don't you? Wishes bring nothing but airy dreams that come and go, but willing and working bring solid realities.

Remarks on the Mule.

The mule is a vertebrayte. He has four legs, the rear ones being steam boiler explosions in disguise. He has also a pair of lungs larger than an emigrant's valise, and he can execute the most fatal love-taps of any animate creature in all creation and part of New Jersy. The idea of nitro-glycerine was taken from the kick of the mule. More profanity has been expressed upon him than would, if judiciously distributed, stock up all the theological seminaries in the land. The mule is extremely musical, and, like all grand musical instruments, is composed mostly of stops; and as a stoppist he is a success. In this respect he is like the day laborer. Neither can go as fast as an express train or a false rumor, but they can stop 137 degrees quicker by actual count.

I remember once being in the country. It was in the season when the small boy was being tied up into a hard knot by the first peaches of the season, which consisted of a piece of buckskin wrapped around a piece of cobble-stone. The flowers were in bloom and the country swain was coming home from picnics with a huckleberry pie war-map upon the seat of his pants. It was at this time, then, that I resolved, while enjoying all the comforts and soul-satisfying beauties of pastoral life, to see the mule upon his native heath. I found him quietly dozing as though at his own fireside, surrounded by his immediate friends and relatives. His mind was filled with peace and his hide with splinters—from numerous clubs that had been used to fondle him with. He was running over with a virtuous serenity. I wanted to hear him warble. So, after I had used up a spade on him, he suddenly sucked into his lungs all the air in the three adjoining counties, and then issued a specimen number of his brays that was enough to lift a mortgage from a two-thousand acre farm, or give a mummy the tinderpest. I have heard Nilsson sing for $1,200 a night, heard the opera of "Fra Diavolo" by a Choctaw brass band, and "Rory O'Moore" on a bass-drum by a toothless private, but this was the most astounding musical matinee I ever had a free pass to in all my life. Every note was fired forth in a solid chunk, and the sound was enough to make a man's spirit go down like the price of linen pants in January. I stayed until that mule had brayed down a rail fence and retired a frame-shed from active business, and then I left, a sadder but a deafer man.—Extracts om Sam Porte's Zoology.

Mother Died of Salt Rheum.

J. W. Adams, Newark, Ohio, says: "Cuticura Remedies are the greatest medicines on earth. Had the worst case of Salt Rheum in this country.—My mother had it twenty years, and in fact died from it. I believe Cuticura would have saved her life. My arms, breast and head were covered for three years, which nothing relieved or cured until I used the Cuticura Remedies.

The Growth of a Child.

INTERESTING OBSERVATIONS IN THE PSYCHOLOGICAL STUDY OF INFANTS.

The Medical Record reproduces the leading features of the studies of Prof. W. Preyer, of Jena, in a field as yet unbroken—that is in the psychological study of infants. This study begins, the Professor says, with the observation of the movements and sensations of a child, and then proceeds to note the development of the different senses, the formation of speech, etc., and the effect of all these things in awakening the intelligence. The first manifestation of voluntary motion occurs about the fourteenth week, when the infant begins to hold up its head. After four months the head is usually balanced well, and at ten months the power to sit up is acquired. Ability to stand was usually, in the cases studied by the Professor, gained suddenly at the end of the first year. The first grasping motions of the hand in the first quarter year are entirely reflex and mechanical, the first voluntary attempt to take hold of an object, not being noticed before the seventeenth week. A child does not show self-consciousness, a knowledge of its independent existence, until the second quarter of the second year. The sensibility of the skin of a new-born child is very low, and it will give no signs of discomfort if it be pricked on the nose or lips or hands. The eyes, too, close slowly when touched, and do not close at all in the bath. An increase of sensibility, however, appears in a day or two after birth.

All infants are deaf at birth, because the outer ear is closed, and there is as yet no air in the middle ear. A response to a strong sound is observed, at the earliest, in six hours, but often not for a day or two. The awakening of the sense may be detected by the blinking which a loud noise occasions. No other organ is thought to contribute to the intellectual development of the child so much as the ear. The first perceptions are those of light. The infant shuts its eyes as soon as light enters them; within a week it turns its glance to the window, but it is three weeks before the eyes will follow a light moved before them. The stupid expression on the child's face does not leave it until the second quarter year, and the face grows more human and girlied with the increase of the power of seeing intelligently. The power to distinguish colors follows that of intelligent attention, and light and bright colors are preferred; but the power to distinguish them by name does not come until the beginning of the third year. The recognition of form, size and distance comes slowly. In the first month the infant pays no attention to the swiftest approach of the person's hand to its face, and in the third year it will still show ignorance of size and no appreciation of distance. The Professor set down in writing every sound uttered by a child during its first two years, and which could be so represented. At first only vowels are heard, but even in the first five weeks these sounds are so diversified as to express different feelings. Thus, the Professor says the periodically broken cry, with knit eyes, denotes hunger; the continuous whine, cold, and the high, penetrating tone, pain. The consonant m was heard in the sixth month, and at this time voices began to be distinguished by the child. Great progress is made in the imitation of sounds after the third half year, and the powers of articulation become well developed by the fourth half year.

Economy.

Say what you will, economy is one of the best home virtues, and one which is everywhere needed. No matter if persons are rich or have large incomes, they should be economical. To waste is wicked. There are better ways to spend money and goods than to waste them. It is the poorest use they can be put to. Many people would be economical if they knew how. It is an art to practice economy. To do it well, one must know the art. All can have it if they will. It is an arithmetical art. It is the conclusion of numbers. All must live and ought to live well, but how to live best at the least expense is the work of figures to tell. We must count the cost of ways and means and compare them. Many people use expensive articles of food and dress, when cheaper ones would be in every way better and more serviceable. Especially in regulating the table expenses is there a great want of economy. A little useful information concerning the qualities of food, the amount and kind of nutritious matter they contain, the wants of the human system and the best ways of cooking, would often save fully one-third and, in many instances, half the expense. A wise economy in table expenses is favorable to health, and in this way saves time, drugs, expense and doctor bills, strength, flesh and happiness. The whole system of greasing and preparing, and what is called enriching food, is expensive, unhealthy and useless. Fat, oil, tallow and oleaginous substances can be put to a better use than greasing food and diseasing the digestive economy.

Bedlam.

The term "Bedlam," so often applied to lunatic asylums, is merely a corruption of Bethlem, a hospital of that name having been set apart in London, three centuries ago, for the treatment of such patients. It need hardly be mentioned that insanity is a disease due to high mental cultivation. In Scotland the proportion is one to 562, while in England where there is less culture, it is one to 783. In our own country it is one to 750. It is never found, however, among barbarians. There are but few lunatics in India, and in countries deprived of political liberty, such as Italy and Austria, the proportion is very small. Among the more noted instances may be mentioned George III., whose mind was disordered during the last thirty years of his life. Dr. Brown, former superintendent of the Bloomingdale Asylum, became a victim of the disease he was treating, and the constant study of insanity led to his own mental wreck. Horace Greely's case is too well known to require detail. It is evident his mind was crushed by the distress occasioned by the political error into which he fell. Gerritt Smith, the famous philanthropist, was at one time deranged, and was during his attack an inmate of the Utica Asylum. James Otis, the Revolutionary patriot, became deranged in his latter days, and, while in this condition, was killed by a stroke of lighting. American statesmen have been remarkably exempt from this calamity.

Gentlemen—Having been afflicted a number of years with indigestion and general debility, by the advice of my doctor I used Hop Bitters, and must say they afforded me almost instant relief. I am glad to be able to testify in their behalf. Thos. G. Knox.

Power of the Plug Hat.

The plug hat is virtually a sort of social guaranty for the preservation of peace and order. He that puts one on has given a hostage to the community for his good behavior. The wearer of a plug hat must move with a certain sedateness and propriety. He cannot run or jump, or romp, or get into a fight, except at the peril of his head gear. All the hidden influences of the beaver tend toward respectability. He who wears one is obliged to keep the rest of his clothing in decent trim, that there may be no incongruity between head and body. He is apt to become thoughtful through the necessity of watching the sky whenever he goes out. The chanches are that he will buy an umbrella, which is another guaranty for good behavior, and the care of hat and umbrella, perpetual and exacting as it must ever be, adds to the sweet seriousness of his character. Then the man who wears a plug hat naturally takes to the society of women, with all its elevating accessories. He cannot go hunting or fishing without abandoning his beloved hat, but in the moderate enjoyments of female companionship, croquet and lawn tennis, he may sport his beaver with impunity; in other words the constant use of a plug hat makes a man conspicuous in manner, quiet and gentlemanly in conduct, and the companion of the ladies. The inevitable result is prosperity, marriage and church membership.

Zero's History.

ACCIDENT BY WHICH DEGREES WERE CONFERRED ON THE WEATHER.

"Zero," on the common thermometer, like the fanciful name of the constellations, is a curious instance of the way wise men's errors are made immortal by becoming popular. It may be worth while to say that the word itself (zero) comes to us through the Spanish from the Arabic, and means empty, hence, nothing. In expressions like "90 degrees Fahr., the abbreviation "Fah.," stands for Fahrenheit, a Prussian merchant of Dantzic, on the Baltic Sea. His full name was Gabriel Daniel Fahrenheit.

From a boy he was a close observer of nature, and when only nineteen years old, in the remarkably cold winter of 1709, he experimented by putting snow and salt together, and noticed that it produced a degree of cold equal to the coldest day of the year. And as that day was the coldest the oldest inhabitant could remember, Gabriel was the more struck with the coincidence of his little scientific discovery, and hastily concluded that he had found the lowest degree of temperature in the world, either natural or artificial. He called the degree zero, and constructed a thermometer or rude weather-glass, with a scale graduating up from zero to boiling point, which he numbered 212, and the freezing 32, because, as he thought, mercury contracted the thirty-second of its volume on being cooled down from the temperature of freezing water to zero, and expanded a one hundred and eighieth on being heated from the freezing to the boiling point.

Time showed that this arrangement, instead of being truly scientific, was as arbitary as the division of the Bible into verses and chapters, and that these two points no more represented the real extremes of temperature than "from Dan to Beersheba" expressed the exact extremes of Palestine.

But Fahrenheit's thermometer had been widely adopted with its inconvenient scale, and none thought of any better until his name became an authority, for Fahrenheit finally abandoned trade and gave himself up to science.

The three countries which use Fahrenheit are England, Holland and America. Russia and Germany use Reaumer's thermometer, in which the boiling point is counted 80 degrees above the freezing point. France uses the centigrade thermometer, so called, because it marks the boiling point 100 degrees from freezing point. On many accounts the centigrade system is the best, and the triumph of convenience will be obtained when zero is made the freezing point, and when the boiling point is put 100 or 1000 degrees from it, and all the subdivisions are fixed decimally

The Benefits of Algebra.

We have studied Algebra in our youth We loved it, and used to get up nights to dig into its depths. We had to, or get our neck twisted by the teacher next days. In later years we find algebra of vast service to us in our business. It helps us in solving many a difficult problem. For instance we will suppose we owe our paper maker a bill, a very supposable case, and he writes to find out when we propose to pay him something on account. We at once brush up our algebraical information, and the situation appears as follows:

Let A represent the paper maker, B the paper, C ourselves, D the amount of the bill and X the unknown quantity. Then the problem stands; A minus B and C plus D, transposing according to the well known rule in such cases made and provided, we get A minus B and D, and C plus B, which by inversion gives X, the indefinite quantity, which is the date when we shall make a remittance, if it doesn't storm. We draw all this out nicely on a clean sheet of paper and forward it to our paper-maker, remarking that having received his favor of the etc., we beg to hand to him the enclosed, etc. He looks it carefully over, sees that A, which is himself, is minus B and D, which are the paper and the money to pay for it, and that C, ourselves, are minus B, the fifty reams of paper, more or less, and that the quotient X, the indefinite quantity, is a very indefinite quantity indeed, and he rubs his aching head in a dazed sort of a way, and feebly instructs his bookkeeper not to draw on the Courier as before directed, as they will probably remit in a few days.—Rockland Courier.

The Secret of Good Manners.

The secret of good manners is to forget one's own self altogether. The people of really fine breeding are the ones who never think of themselves, but only of the pleasure they can give to others. No adornment of beauty, or learning, or accomplishments, goes so far in its power to attract as the one gift of sympathy.

In all French history no woman had a stronger fascination for whoever came within her reach than Madam Recamier. She was called beautiful; but her portraits prove that her beauty was not to be compared with that of many less-charming women. And even when every attraction of person had long passed away, and she was an old, old woman, her sway over the hearts of others was as powerful as ever. What was her secret?

It was this one thing solely—her genuine and unaffected interest in the good and ill fortunes of her friends. Authors came to her and read her their books; painters came to her with their pictures; statesmen with their projects. She was sweet, simply and unconsciously, as a rose is sweet. She really cared for the happiness and success of others, and they felt the genuineness of her sympathy. It surrounded her with immortal charm.

Let any girl try Madam Recamier's experiment. Let her go into society thinking nothing of the admiration she may win; but everything of the happiness she can confer. It matters little whether her face is beautiful, or her toilette costly. Before the end of three months she will be a happy girl herself; for the World likes sunshine and sympathy, and turns to them as the flowers bask in the sun of June.

A Georgia man was fishing near a rock, under which was a snake's den, the other day, when the reptile came gliding up from a foraging expedition and was dissappearing in the hole under the rock, when, with a dexterous movement, the man seized him by the tail and threw him twenty feet away. The snake hardly knew what had happened and again essayed to enter his domicile in the same manner. Again he treated just as before. Never despairing, for a third time the wily serpent approached the rock. This time he came deliberately, as if contemplating the situation. Arriving at the mouth of the hole, he deliberately coiled himself up and put out his long tongue, as if to take in the full situation. For a while he remained in this defensive position, when he carefully began to uncoil, at the same time disappearing tail foremost into the den, to the admiration of the man who had been amusing himself at his expense.

OLD GRANDPA'S SOLILOQUY.

It wasn't so when I was young—
We used plain language then;
We didn't speak of "them galloots,"
Meanin' boys or men.

When speaking of the nice hand-write
Of Joe, or Tom, or Bill,
We did it plain—we didn't say,
"He slings a nasty quill."

An' when we saw a girl we liked,
Who never failed to please,
We called her pretty, neat, and good,
But not "about the cheese."

Well, when we met a good old friend,
We hadn't lately seen,
We greeted him, but didn't say,
"Hello, you old sardine!"

The boys sometimes got mad an' fit,
We spoke of kicks and blows;
But now they "wheck you on the spoot,
Or "paste him on the nose."

Once, when a youth was turned away
By her he held most dear,
He walked upon his feet—but now
He "walks off on his ear."

We used to dance when I was young,
And used to call it so;
But now they don't—they only "slide
The light fantastic toe."

Of death we spoke in language plain
That no one did perplex;
But in these days one doesn't die—
He "passes in his checks."

We praised the man of common sense;
"His judgment's good," we said;
But now they say, "Well, that old plum
Has got a level head."

It's rather sad the children now
Are learnin' all such talk;
They've learnt to "chin" instead of chat
An' "walze" instead of walk.

To little Harry yesterday—
My grandchild aged two—
I said "You love grandpa?" Said he,
"You bet your boots I do."

The children bowed to strangers once;
It is no longer so—
The little girls, as well as boys,
Now greet you with "Helloa!"

Oh, give me back the good old days,
When both the old and young
Conversed in plain, old-fashioned words,
And slang was never "slung."

"Now, my little boys and girls," said a teacher, "I want you to be very still—so still that you can hear a pin drop." In a minute all was silent; when a little boy shrieked out, "Let her drop!"

A coasting vessel was tossing about in the heavy storm, when one of the sailors, hanging on a rope, thoughtfully observed to a companion similarly employed, "Think of the poor devils caught at a picnic in such weather as this!"

A street sketch: We should really advise Old Shoddy, if he must have a liveried coachman to drive him about, not to select the handsomest and most aristocratic-looking one he can find, because—well, because comparisons are odious.

Waiter—"Do you wish to be called in the morning, sir?" Guest—"Yes, sir." Waiter—"When will you be called, sir?" Guest—"That depends how I feel in the morning. I am very tired now. I'll ring for you when I desire to be called."

"Take the elevator," is inscribed on the fence of an Iowa meadow. A curious traveller who climbed the fence discovered in about ten seconds that the elevator is of a dark brindle color, with a curl in the middle of his forehead.

"Got any kids?" the census man said
To the woman from over the Rhine;
She hit him a belt on the side of the head, and excitely answered: "Du hol lisches, unverschemtes, ausgedorrtes, muster eines frechen narren, verl so mein haus, oder ich mache bol ge nischer wurst aus deinem leepen hop to mit einem stein? You think I was a goat?"

Quite a number of darkies, young and old, were fishing down on Kuhn's wharf, when a boy about 12 fell off and would have met with a watery grave had it not been for the energy and presence of mind of old Uncle Mose. After the boy was safely landed a bystander took occasion to praise old Mose for the heroism he had displayed. "Is the boy your son?" asked the sympathetic spectator. "No, boss; but he mout jest as well a been. He had all de bait in his pocket."

Why Chinamen Never Naturalize.

The penal code of China contains a provision which is correctly translated as follows:

All persons renouncing their country and allegiance or devising the means thereof shall be beheaded, and in the punishment of this offence no distinction shall be made between principals and accessories. The property of all such criminals shall be confiscated and their wives and children distributed as slaves to the great officers of state. * * The parents, grandparents, brothers, and grandchildren of such criminals, whether habitually living with them under the same roof or not, shall be perpetually banished to the distance of 2,000 leagues. All those who purposely conceal or connive at this crime shall be strangled. Those who inform against criminals of this class shall be rewarded with the whole of their property. * * * If the plan is contrived but not executed, the principals are to be strangled and the accessories punished with blows and banishment."

This provision, which has only lately become known, explains why John has no particular desire to naturalize, cut off his queue and become a real "Melican man." The law maker who devised it conferred a more incalulable blessing on California than any Caucasian in the state has ever done or ever will do. John may Christianize (four or five centuries hence), but he will be in no haste to naturalize while that section of the penal code of his native land remains unchanged.

How to use Lemons.

A good deal had been said through the papers lately about the healthfulness of lemons. The latest advice as to how to use them, so they will do the most good, runs as follows: "Most people know the benefit of lemonade before breakfast, but few know how it is more than doubled by taking one at night also. The way to get the better of a bilious system without blue pills or quinine is to take the juice of one, two or three lemons, as the appetite craves, in as much ice-water as makes it pleasant to drink, without sugar, before going to bed. In the morning on rising, or an hour before breakfast, take the juice of one lemon in a goblet of water. This will clear the system of humors and bile, with mild efficacy, without any of the weakening tendency of calomel or congress water. People should not irritate the stomach by eating the lemon clear; the powerful acid of the juice, which is almost corrosive, infallibly produces inflammation after a while, but properly diluted, so that it does not burn or draw the throat, it does its full medical work without any harm, and when the stomach is clear of food has abundant opportunity to work on the system thoroughly.

ARTHURS' HOME MAGAZINE.

A NEW YEAR —WITH— New and Increased Attractions!

The Home Magazine occupies, and has always occupied a field especially its own. While gathering for its pages from the whole range of general literature, the editor and his efficient co-laborers exercise the most careful discrimination in regard to quality and influence. Nothing is admitted which, in their view, can give false ideas of life, or weaken the bonds of virtue. No matter what may be the reputation, nor how brilliant the talents of the writer, if his moral teachings are at all questionable, they can not find a place in our magazine.—And beyond this, its publishers claim that in its peculiar character and varied departments it is more thoroughly identified with the people in their every-day life and home and social interests than any other first-class periodical.

The Home Magazine for 1882 will be the most interesting and attractive that has yet appeared.

WHAT OUR SUBSCRIBERS SAY.

"The day on which the Home Magazine comes is hailed every month with joy, not only by myself, but the whole family. It is like the face of an old friend."

SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.

An Interesting Series of Meetings and an Organization Effected.

The call for a meeting to organize a Sunday School Union for Lenawee Co., that should be auxiliary to the State Sunday School Union was responded to by most of the S. S. workers of this vicinity and some from abroad. There were present S. M. Sackett and W. H. Boyd of Monroe, C. B. Stowell of Hudson, S. K. Sparhr of Adrian, Rev. Mr. Hunt of Raisin, and Rev. J. A. De Spelder of Macon.

Three sessions were held; the Sunday afternoon session at the Baptist church, the evening session at the Presbyterian church and the morning session at the Baptist church.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON SESSION.

Meeting called to order by W. H. Boyd of Monroe, who stated its object. Rev. Wm. Grandy, pastor of the Presbyterian church of Tecumseh read appropriate passages of scripture and offered an earnest prayer for the S. S. of the county. S. M. Sackett of Monroe was chosen chairman and L. G. North of Tecumseh, secretary.

The address of welcome was by Rev. C. E. Conley. He welcomed the convention to the village and to the house of worship of the Baptists of Tecumseh, and bade the new organization God speed. The chairman responded in appropriate remarks and explained the object of the meeting more fully. He showed the importance of the S. S. work because it is foundation work, the establishing of foundation of character. Prayer was then offered by Rev. C. E. Conley and Dr. H. Peters of Tecumseh.

The next hour was for the children, and they were entertained by Dr. L. G. North, Dr. R. B. House and C. A. Slayton, the superintendents of the Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian Sunday schools of Tecumseh, and by chairman S. M. Sackett of Monroe. The attendance of children was not large.

The Sunday Schools and the State, their relation to each other, was next considered by W. H. Boyd of Monroe, in an able paper of considerable length. Some of Mr. Boyd's statements could be considered by our statesmen with profit to the commonwealth. This closed the program for the afternoon and the convention adjourned to meet at the Presbyterian church in the evening. During this session the convention was furnished with an abundant interspersment of music by the Baptist choir.

EVENING SESSION.

The evening session at the Presbyterian church was largely attended and was conceded by all to be the most interesting meeting of the convention. It was most pleasantly interpersed with sacred singing by the Presbyterian choir. Rev. R. S. Pardington of Tecumseh, read the 84th Psalm and offered prayer. The chairman, S. M. Sackett, then took charge of the session and requested Rev. Wm. Grandy to lead the congregation in prayer.

Latent talent in the church, how to enlist it in the S. S. work. This interesting subject was discussed by Rev. Wm. Hunt of Raisin, C. E. Conley and Rev. R. S. Pardington.

The object of S. S. teaching, Spirituality essential to success. This subject was ably handled by Mrs. E. B. Wood in a most interesting essay, after which it was discussed by Rev. S. K. Spahr of Adrian, C. E. Conley, W. H. Boyd, Wm. Grandy, R. S. Pardington, and C. B. Stowell of Hudson.

Mr. Conley said during this discussion that some one whose name he would not mention had told him that most of the infidels of the country were graduates of the Sunday school. Over this statement a most lively discussion occurred between Mr. Conley and Mr. Grandy. Had not the writer known the two men to be firm friends and had he not seen them in friendly conversation after the meeting closed, he would have thought they were at loggerheads. The debate added spice to the occasion.

Two committees were then appointed by the chair, each to report at the morning session. The object to effect a permanent organization.

Committee on Constitution—R. B. House, P. S. McKinnon and L. G. North.

Closing remarks by S. M. Sackett, after which a collection of five dollars was taken to defray expenses. Adjournment.

MORNING SESSION.

The morning session was held at the Baptist church, beginning at 9 o'clock. After a short service of prayer, in absence of the chairman, S. M. Sackett, B. L. Baxter was chosen chairman. The attendance was small but the subject, How can the Sunday School be rendered more attractive without impairing its usefulness, under discussion proved to be of more than usual interest. No superintendent could have been present and gone away unbenefited. Remarks were made by Revs. C. E. Conley, S. K. Spahr, J. A. De Spelder, R. S. Pardington, Dr. L. G. North, Dr. Meeker, Mrs. J. Merritt, P. S. McKinnon, B. L. Baxter and Dr. R. B. House.

The committee on constitution reported a constitution which was considered seriatim, and after numerous amendments was adopted. The constitution will be published separately from this report.

The committee on nomination of officers then reported as follows:

President—Geo. P. McElroy, Adrian.
Vice President—B. L. Baxter, Tecumseh.
Secretary—L. G. North, Tecumseh.
Treasurer—R. B. House, "
Executive Committee—The four above in connection with W. S. Wilcox of Adrian, D. R. Shier of Hudson and W. W. Bliss of Blissfield.

The report was adopted.

The place of the next meeting was fixed at Hudson and the time, Aug. 29 and 30. After allowing a few bills and instructing the Treasurer and Secretary in regard to a few details, the meeting was adjourned by the benediction.

The series of meetings were of great profit. The object of the new organization as set forth in its constitution is to make more efficient the State Sunday School Union, and to bring to the highest possible degree of usefulness the Sunday Schools of Lenawee Co. It is to be entirely unsectarian. It is hoped that the bringing together of the different denominations may benefit all, may get the S.S. of old Lenawee out of the ruts and make them so useful that the county shall not know another Navin for a century to come. Two meetings are to be held annually. Each school is entitled to two delegates at each meeting. If the S. S. workers wish to make themselves and their schools successful no better means of doing so is offered than to largely attend the meetings of and to vigorously sustain the Lenawee S. S. Union.

Nine Physicians Outdone.

It is generally considered a pretty difficult task to outdo a physician, but the following will conclusively prove where nine were completely outdone. Mrs. Helen Pharviz, 331 Dayton St., Chicago, Ill., was treated for Consumption by nine physicians, and all pronounced her case incurable. Seven bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption completely cured her. Doubting ones, please drop her a postal card and convince yourselves. Sold by all druggists.

OUR TEXAS LETTER.

GREENVILLE, TEXAS, March 24, 1882.

I find myself seated provided with pen, ink and paper, and I am in a writing mood. As the weather is a subject well adapted to open a conversation with, I will at once inform you that after about two months almost continuous rain, the weather has changed and we now have fair weather. As I stated in a former letter, we have been almost buried in black, waxy mud. Although Greenville is an incorporated city with its mayor, marshall, policemen, &c., our streets have had very little attention paid them in the way of improvement, and in a rainy time they present a truly deplorable condition. Yet we have one thing to console us. If our streets are not McAdamized, neither are our water works Navinized.

I see in your issue of the 16th that the Farmers' Club have declared me an honorary member. I shall now take a deeper and livlier interest in all that pertains to the well being of the club than I have heretofore. I feel highly flattered at this mark of goodwill on the part of the members of the club, and they can rest assured that it is fully appreciated. I regret exceedingly that circumstances prevent my attendance at the meeting of the club to-night. In the first place I did not receive the information that I had been declared an honorary member, together with the kind invitation to be present at the oyster supper on the night of the 24th until the night of the 20th, and as about twelve hundred miles intervene between me and the place of meeting, I could not reach it in time. The saying that "'tis distance that lends enchantment to the view," fails to hold good in this instance. I am sure that to be present at that meeting would be far more enchanting to me than to be hundreds of miles away. As I glance around my room here what meets my gaze? A large array of bottles and packages containing all manner of bitterness and nauseous compounds. What a different scene would my eyes rest on there.

I would see the sparkling eyes, rosy cheeks, ruby lips, and hear the silvery laughter of those human magnets who have the power "to keep the boys on the farm." Although I am unable to be present to-night to assist my colleague, S. C. Stacy, in deciding whether the girls are good looking enough to keep the boys on the farm, still I have no doubt as to his decision. He certainly has a soul attuned to what is good and pure and lovely; and what is there in all the realm of nature, more beautiful than the masterpiece, the finishing stroke of the Creator—woman? And my colleague is a lawyer, and it is the first object of a lawyer to look after the fee, and so this is directly in his line of business, as

"Fee-simple and a simple fee,
And all the fees in tail,
Are nothing when compared to thee,
Thou best of fees, fe-male."

Although I live in town, yet often, when time and opportunity favor, I hie away to enjoy the beauties of nature. I have a farm a short distance from town, and when I am worried and perplexed with the clatter of town I seek the quiet and repose of the country, and amid the scenes peculiar there, I enjoy life as I never do in town. And then I take a lively interest in agricultural matters. I enjoy farm life, and I can truly exclaim:

How blest the farmer's simple life,
How pure the joy it yields;
Far from the world's tempestous strife,
Free 'mid the scented fields.

Although I thus enjoy the retirement of country life,

"I love not man the less, but nature more
From these our interviews, in which I steal
From all I may be, or have been before,
To mingle with the universe and feel
What I can ne'er express, yet cannot all conceal."

It is often asked why so many young men leave the farm and repair to towns and cities to seek homes. There are various reasons why such is the case. One main reason is because the farm is not rendered attractive and interesting enough. The home of the country boy is too often unpleasant. He has no interesting books or papers to read; no flowers embellish the grounds around the house; no trailing vines to make the farm house attractive; he has no blooded horses or cattle or hogs or fowls to fondle or care for, but year after year he is compelled to toil from early morn till night with nothing attractive to vary the dull monotony of his life. Then is it to be wondered at that he tires of this, and seeks other occupations, and other scenes? Instead of making all about the farm and farm house dull and dark and gloomy, make the surroundings cheerful, let the sunlight of love warm all within, give the boys something to read in the way of books, papers and magazines, give each one a pig, a calf, a colt or something of this kind, to own and care for. Get them interested in the improvement of animals, or grain or vegetables, make the farm house as pleasant and attractive as possible, let them have parties and singing schools and picnics fishfrys and such innocent pastimes during the season when the work is not too pressing on the farm, adorn the walls with pictures, talk pleasantly with them on the various matters which interest them, don't be morose and sordid, allow them some liberty, and don't treat them as slaves; if at times they are full of glee and are noisy and romp and laugh, let them, and don't scold them, they'll be all the better and happier to give free vent to their feelings. Teach them honor, honesty and virtue, and make home what home ought to be, and then you can rest assured that comparatively few boys will leave the farm.

To the members of the club I have a suggestion to make. I make it to all and especially to the girls. As we cannot conveniently meet each other in propria personæ, we can do so photographically. I should be highly pleased to have each member's photograph to grace my album. Should we thus exchange, mine could be utilized by suspending it from a pole and erecting the pole in a cornfield, as it is a desideratum with the farmer to have something to scare crows, and this is an article I could guarantee. I shall anxiously await, the report of the meeting to-night. TEXAS.

Mrs. Nancy Harman, of Mansfield, O., writes: "I have been under the care of a physician during the past seven years. Sometimes I would feel better, and then again I would feel worse. The past two years nothing seemed to help me. About two months ago my doctor seemed to be getting discouraged, and I lay completely bed-ridden. I grew very nervous; the least noise gave me great irritation.—The doctor, I suppose more to get me off his hands than anything else, as he said I would never leave my bed, told me I might try Brown's Iron Bitters, and at the same time remarking, 'It was a good tonic and would help keep me alive.' I have used the remedy about two months, and have been out of bed nearly two weeks, and now help about the house. It has acted like a miracle in my case."

THE WALTER A. WOOD HARVESTING MACHINES

Take the Lead.

In 1853, 500 Machines were sold.
In 1881, 40,413 were sold, and
47,000 have been ordered for 1882.

But the NE PLUS ULTRA of Harvesting Machinery is the Wood Twine Binder. This machine was first put upon the market in 1880, and 4,184 machines were sold that year. In 1881, the sales swelled to 10,034, and orders for over 12,000 have already been received for 1882.

THE WOOD TWINE BINDER!

Possesses these special points of excellence:

1—It is the most perfect automatic self binder ever made.
2—It effects a positive separation of the bound from the unbound grain.
3—The sheaf is formed and compressed without any strain on the twine until the knot is tied.
4—The grain is straightened by the action of the packer as it enters the binder.
5—The automatic uniform sizing of the bundle, thus relieving the driver of the care of stopping and starting the binder.

Last year's machines proved such a perfect success that they will be built substantially the same for 1882, with such improvements in minor details as may be found necessary.

Every farmer desiring to buy a self binder should examine the Wood Twine Binder before purchasing.

Do Not Be Deceived.

In these times of quack medicine advertisements everywhere, it is truly gratifying to find one remedy that is worthy of praise, and which really does as recommended. Electric Bitters we can vouch for as being a true and reliable remedy, and one that will do as recommended. They invariably cure Stomach and Liver Complaints, Diseases of the Kidneys and Urinary difficulties. We know whereof we speak, and can readily say, give them a trial. Sold at fifty cents a bottle, by all druggists.

WE make our most respectful bow to Morgan Miller for a great roll of San Francisco newspapers.

PROF. FAIRFIELD is in Manistee this week, having been called there to conduct a teacher's institute.

THE HERALD boys say they wish election would take place every day. If it did they would not have to buy any cigars.

DUKE WOOD, of this village, will have lived with his wife sixty years next fall, and he has never been divorced either.

C. F. Engle, Druggist, says: "Rinehart's Worm Lozenges excel everything else for Worms, I cannot keep store without them."

HIGH-CONSTABLE, Samuel A. James, has received a splendid new badge of office—a billy and star — from the "kids" of Tecumseh.

THE Presbyterian Sunday School have an Easter concert next Sunday evening at the church and extend an invitation to you to be present.

MR. AND MRS. GILES CLEVELAND, who now reside in Detroit, have been spending several days among their old acquaintances in Tecumseh.

NEXT Sunday morning at the Universalist church, discourse appropriate to Easter, and in the evening an Easter concert by the Sunday school.

The most sacred obligation is the marriage contract. The most sacred duty is to maintain one's health. The best medicine is Brown's Iron Bitters.

E. V. DEPUY purposes to push his Agricultural Implement trade this season. He has a line of first-class machines, the good qualities of which are set forth in another column.

DR. JENKINS, of Franklin, has purchased the property west of the corners, formerly owned by S. S. Decker and removed into his new quarters, where he asks all his old friends to call on him.

FOR some time Mr. Grandy has held Monday evening preaching services in the Presbyterian church, Deerfield. Last Monday night he received five new members into the communion of the church there.

THE Adrian Times has appeared in a new dress. It is neat and tasty and fits to a dot. The Times is always well edited, and its typographical appearance will now correspond with its editorial management.

SPECIAL services at the Baptist church next Sunday. At the close of the morning service the hand of fellowship will be given to new members. The sermon will be appropriate to the occasion. Easter services will be held in the evening.

THE musical entertainment last Tuesday evening given by the ladies of the Presbyterian church was much superior to the ordinary amateur concert. Some of the best talent of Tecumseh assisted, while Prof. Rupp and Miss Flick Gaston of Adrian formed a valuable acquisition to the company. There was a good audience in attendance and those present were well satisfied.

WE have heard several complaints lately in regard to the management of reserved seats at the opera house. Last evening several purchasers of reserved seats found them pre-empted by others, and it was claimed by some that seats were sold twice. We do not know where the fault lies, but the managers of the opera house owe it to the public to ascertain exactly where the responsibility for the trouble rests, and to apply a remedy at once.

MR. GRANDY has decided to accept the call from the First Presbyterian church of Sioux City, Ia. He leaves his church here strong, fully united and prosperous, and takes with him, for himself and family, the respect and confidence of the community.—Sioux City is a rapidly growing town and railroad center of about the size of Adrian. It is located on high ground with hills or bluffs rising picturesquely behind it; it is on the west line of the State, at the junction of the Big Sioux and Missouri rivers.

A LATE number of The Scientific American gives a sketch of the New York World's new building on Park Row. The World for twenty years has held a foremost place in American journalism, and now that the work of re-organization is completed, and the paper provided with a building, and new machinery and appliances designed especially for its occupation and use, and in convenience and efficiency absolutely without parallel in America, the harvest time of the World has clearly begun. The World is to-day not only one of the best, but one of the most prosperous among the large dailies of the Atlantic States.

MR. & MRS. THOS. R. LOVETT, of Chicago, were in town a few days last week. They came out to be present at the last sad rites of Mrs. Wm. Lovett.

SERVICES appropriate to Easter will be held on Sabbath at the M. E. church. The pastor will preach in the morning on "The World's Hope—a Risen Christ," and in the evening "The Reason for that Hope."

MR. WM. P. SILVERS of Clinton has been seriously ill for a few days. He was unable to attend town meeting last Monday, the first one he has missed since he attained his majority, 58 years ago. It was a great disappointment to him to be unable to vote.

THE Hess Acme Opera Company will appear at Adrian on Tuesday evening, April 11th, in Audran's opera comique, entitled "The Mascotte." This is the best company in this line now on the road. It is composed of sixty members, many of whom hold high rank in the theatrical profession.

THE contest in Raisin was a very close one and resulted in the success of the National ticket. Horace Holdredge was chosen supervisor by 14 majority. The vote between Robt M. Boyd and Woolston Comfort was a tie, and the former drew the lucky lot and carried off the prize. The prohibition ticket polled about 30 votes.

EX SHERIFF Cairnes has bought C. C. Tefft's farm in Raisin, and will take possession next week. Mr. Tefft has rented the Philo C. Mills property in the village, and he will move his family here next week. Mr. Tefft has done his share of hard work, and as he is in good circumstances he thinks he will take a rest and enjoy life for a while in the village. By his removal here another good neighbor will find a home in a good neighborhood.

IN the proper column is recorded the marriage of Mr. Wm. J. Waldron and Miss Isabella F. Griswold. Again two hearts are made happy, and we know of none who better deserve a good share of this world's happiness. The bride and groom have both lived here from childhood and have lots of friends who will extend congratulations. We shall miss our guess if in this instance the bride does not possess sufficient attractions to keep the young man on the farm.

THE TOWNSHIP ELECTION.

Last Monday was a beautiful day, and a light vote was polled. Most people seemed to prefer attending to their business rather than attending election. There was considerable quiet work done however, and the independent scratcher was abroad. There were four tickets in the field, Republican, Democratic, National and Prohibition. The man who couldn't find a ticket to suit him last Monday must have been hard to please. The Democrats carried off the first prize by a "large majority." On the balance of the ticket, honors were about even. We give below the number of votes cast for each person, taken from the clerk's tally sheet. Some of the candidates were on two tickets. The letter opposite each name indicates the ticket the person was upon.

NOW WHO IS AHEAD?

Protection Guaranteed Our Customers.

To our Agents and Customers:

We find that the article published in the St. Paul and Minneaplis Pioneer Press, of March 24th, claiming that representatives of C. H. McCormick had commenced a suit against the Minneapolis Harvester Works for infringement of patent, is being seized upon by the McCormick local agents as a campaign document, and used as an advertisement to aid in the sale of their machines. The McCormick agents know as little about these matters as the farmers themselves, yet they grasp at this straw most avariciously, hoping to frighten farmers into the purchase of McCormick machines, which they find hard to sell by honorable and fair means.

We have not, up to this date, (March 31st), been advised of any proceedings being brought against us. The Appleby Binder, as now manufactured by us, is covered by several patents. The devices in the Gorham patent upon which we understand they are basing their claim (they refused to state to us what their claim was) we are not using, having discarded them two years ago, in order to produce a more perfect working machine. If action is brought against us, and the courts decide we are liable, we will willingly pay any royalty which may be imposed, but we doubt if such decision will ever be made.

Shop rights for the construction of the Appleby Binder have been sold to the leading manufacturers of harvesting machines in this country, including McCormick Company, who are now paying a royalty to Mr. Appleby, upon every binder manufactured by them. Many of these manufacturers have men in their service who have made patent matters a life study, and are as competent to decide as to the validity of a patent as the best patent lawyers; and it would be strange indeed that these companies would pay large consideration for the use of patents of which there was the least doubt as to their genuineness, or which infringed upon some prior invention.

The facts in the case are, we were among the last companies to enter the field with self-binding harvesters, but have built the latest improved and best machine, while others are building upon the older and undeveloped patterns. Thus we have rapidly taken our place in the front rank, and our machine is the favorite with dealers and farmers. Some of the older concerns, who have had full sway for a dozen or more years, are extremely jealous of their young rival, and seek, by contemptible and disgraceful means, to injure our trade. We say, however, that we do not propose to take a back seat, but will continue to manufacture and furnish farmers with the best Binder yet produced. We are abundantly able and will pay any royalties the courts decide we shall pay, and we pledge ourselves to defend, to the fullest extent, every purchaser of the Minneapolis Harvester and Twine Binder.

DIED.

MILLER—At the residence of the late S. V. Miller, in the town of Macon, on Wednesday, March 29th, Lucinda Miller, widow of George Bodine, of Lodi, Seneca county, N. Y., in the 64th year of her age.

MILLER—Also, at the same place, Friday morning, March 31st, Martha V. V., widow of Stephen V. Miller, aged 77.

These two deaths in the same house and within thirty hours of each other, thus making a home vacant, created a profound sensation in the community in which they occurred. Mrs. Bodine moved to Michigan just after the close of the late war in 1866, and shortly after the death of her husband, and has lived for the most part since at her home in Clinton, in this county. Upon the death of her brother last spring, she came down to be near her sister-in-law, and to minister to her in her weakness and decline. Little was it then thought she would precede her sister to the tomb. Early in life she made profession of her faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and lived to adorn the doctrines of God, her Saviour, in all things. She was a most earnest, active, faithful Christian, in word not only, but in deed, ministering often to the charities, and taking the deepest interest in the affairs of the church to which she belonged, as well as extending her sympathies to all denominations, who were engaged in carrying on the work of the Lord Jesus Christ. Death came to her somewhat unexpectedly, but found her not unprepared. Her funeral services were held at the house on Saturday, conducted by Rev. J. A. De Spelder, when her mortal remains were carried to their resting place in her burial plot in the village cemetery, at Clinton. "Requiescat in pace."

Mrs Miller was buried on Sabbath from the M. E. Church, at Ridgeway, exactly one year from the date of her husband's death. They came together to this state, then a territory and almost a wilderness, in the year 1834. After living a short time at Ridgeway, they located where they have since resided. There they breasted the trials and privations of an early settlement together, rearing quite a large family of children, part of whom have preceded them to the tomb, and building up a home which was the abode of genuine hospitality, and where especially the poor and needy always found welcome relief and sympathy. Of her home the wife and the mother was the life, the light, the joy, and one of the best of mothers. If we who knew her best might speak of her in terms that are fitting, it might seem the language of extravagant eulogy or a partial affectation. There are few such women so faithful and so devoted in all the relations of life. To this was added the graces of the Christian life. Though long and severely tried, she manifested patience and resignation to the will of her Father in Heaven. Often complaining that she feared she was not patient enough, and expressing even at times in her humble and modest way doubts of her own piety, doubts and fears which, 'tis needless to say, in which others did not share. Tenderly, reverently, affectionately, her sons and grandsons carried her to her grave. We drop the tear of sorrow over one who was our mother and the friend of everybody, just as ready and willing to minister to the wants of the poor and the lowly as to the richest and most exalted in station. After a most appropriate sermon by Rev. J. A. De Spelder, her remains were laid by the side of those of her late husband in the Ridgeway cemetery, there to await the resurrection of the just. Her children and her children's children rise up and call her blessed. Above all God from the skies pronounces her blessed. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, from henceforth, yea saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors and their works do follow them." J.H.K.

LOVETT—In Raisin, Mich., March 21st, 1882, after an illness of six months, Minerva, wife of Wm. Lovett, and daughter of John S. McRay, aged 59 years and 8 months.

She was born in Delaware County, state of New York, August 14th, 1822. Came to this state with her parents in the fall of 1830; lived here over half a century, and endured many of the privations and hardships of the early settlers. She was married to Wm. Lovett, Jan. 17th, 1844, and they moved on the farm the same year, where she lived until her death. She was the mother of two children, Wm. Chever, who died June 25th, 1866, and Eugene, who now lives on the home farm. She united with the First Presbyterian Church of Tecumseh, in the year 1844. During her last illness she was kindly cared for, mostly by her husband and her son's wife, who were ever untiring in their efforts to gratify her every wish. She bore her sufferings with patience and Christian fortitude, and expressed a perfect willingness to go and be at peace. Truly she felt that "to live is for Christ and to die is gain.

Now who is Ahead?

ST. PAUL, Minn., March 23.—The visit of Mr. Chas. Callahan of Chicago, to this city and Minneapolis to-day was it is understood, for the purpose of demanding of the Minneapolis harvester works in the name of C. H. McCormick, of Chicago, Norman C. Thompson and Helen A. Gorham, of Rockford, Ill., a royalty of ten dollars upon each twine-binding harvester that said company has made or will make. This claim is based upon patents which, after several years of controversy in the patent office, were in 1880 granted to Marquis L. Gorham, of Rockford, and it is claimed by the parties who demand the royalty that they own and control all the patents relating to the automatic binding of the bundles of grain. The Minneapolis harvester-works, the William Deering company of Chicago, the Champion reaper company of Springfield, Ohio, and the Esterly harvester company of Whitewater, and all others that are using twine-binders made under the Appleby patents, are to be proceeded against by the parties controlling the Gorham patents. The attorneys who have been engaged by the McCormick faction are George Harding, of Philadelphia, E. N. Dickerson of New York, M. D. Leggett of Cleveland, O., and Parkinson & Parkinson, Cincinnati. — Chicago Times.

A Student's Essay on Study.

The motives which should incite students to apply themselves assiduously to their books are numerous and of great importance. What influence can any man possibly exert in this age of refinement and culture, if he be devoid of education? Natural talent he may possess, but education does not come by inspiration. No, surely; it can, and can only, be acquired by hard study, diligente, and perseverance. Hence we see the great importance of studying diligently, and learning our tasks, no matter what obstacles intervene to tend to discourage us. We should study because it is our duty to do so; because it is the desire of our fond parents, who, to [illegible] on education, probably deny themselves many of the comforts and pleasures of life; because it is a pleasure to the teacher, who, when he sees his pupils advancing in knowledge, feels that his time has not been wasted; and because it will in future days, when we are able to perceive the fruits of our labor, be to ourselves the greatest pleasure of our lives to look back to those schooldays which, our conscience will tell us, were not spent in idleness. Thus, and thus only can a student become an honor to himself and his relatives, and a blessing to the community in which he is destined to live.

And yet it is a fact too clearly noticeable that a great many boys do not consider of what great importance an education will be to them in after life, when their schooldays shall have long passed by, and they are cast upon the broad world to battle with adversity. They waste the time which is allotted to them for study in occupying themselves with anything and everything except their books, never once giving so much as a thought to the great value of the golden moments which they are thus spending in idleness. They are continually looking forward to recreation hours which will free them, for a time, from the study-hall or class-room, but which they never enjoy half so much as some of those do who, at the proper time, applied themselves studiously to their tasks. Some, as a reason for their want of diligence, say: 'My parents are rich. What need have I of an education? I will never be compelled to work for my living." Too many young men of talent and ability are caught in this trap, and are thus deterred from developing the excellent faculties which they possess, and making educated and useful men of themselves. Thus they continue wasting in idleness their precious time, week after week, month after month, and even year after year. At last, and almost before they are aware of it, they become too old to attend school, and with little, if any, education, they verge into manhood. What would be the result if the wealth of their parents, upon which they had relied so much, and which was the cause of their inaction in schooldays, were, through speculations, or some unforseen cause, suddenly lost? They would be compelled to seek immediately some kind of employment by which to obtain the necessaries of life. Ah! here difficulties of every description begin. For want of an education, they are unfit for the position of a book-keeper, salesman, or the like, and are perhaps forced to do manual labor, or starve; while upon every hand they see their more diligent class-mates of former days holding positions of trust or emolument, possessing wealth and comfort, or engaged in lucrative business of their own building—all obtained by the aid of good and thorough education in youth, and the energy and reliability of character which then enabled them to apply themselves to diligent study.

Practical Education.

An education, yes; but what sort of an education? A bricklayer's education, an artisan's, a farmer's, would indeed help to earn a living. A college education would give him a social advantage, but it would not, in itself, increase his chance of earning a living; it would rather diminish it.

For, as was pointed out in an interesting paper lately published in this magazine, our colleges do not, like the French and German universities, instruct a young man in bread-winning pursuits; the American colleges are, on the contrary, institutions for general culture. I do not take up the question here of the amount and value of the culture they supply. The point for us to note is that the educated young American who has not a special education as a bread-winner is worse off, as to his money prospects, than the young American who has no college education at all. Dig he can not, and to beg he is ashamed. Two of the professions at least are fatally overcrowded. The United States, with a population not greatly larger than that of the German Empire, graduates every year five times as many physicians: for the German Empire limits the number of its doctors, and we do not limit that of ours. Very many of our physicians not only wait years for practice, but never get into practice at all. It is much the same with the profession of law. In both professions there are prizes for a few, and failures, more or less complete, for the many. The engineering, mining, and other scientific professions offer a somewhat better chance, and public life, almost neglected as a profession, will attract a better class of young men from year to year. But upon none of these, save in favored and exceptional cases, as where a son succeeds to his father's practice, can a young man depend for fortune, or even for immediate support. They, too, offer a certain social dignity. But as a rule it is the laborer, artisan, or tradesman that has the better chance of supporting himself; it is the educated man that has, more frequently, to wait before he can pay his way.

If, therefore, we educate our sons, it is all the better reason why we should provide, not indeed for his independence, but some aid during the years which they are likely to spend in waiting before they can achieve their position.

It is to be remembered, too, that these years of waiting may become with such aid, years of scholarly or scientific accomplishment, if not of money-making; years of strengthened preparation; years that might introduce and brighten a career, instead of wasted years that cloud or spoil it.—Harper's Magazine.

PARTIES.—In this country where we are divided into two parties, we can have but little idea of what it is in France. There they have the extreme left, the moderate left, the left, the left center, the constitutional group, the right center, the legitimist group, the Orleanist group, and the Bonapartist group. These are not all, since there are a dozen shades that a man can belong to on these divisions. In this unhappy country if a man is not a republican, a democrat, or a greenbacker, he is absolutely in the cold.

Will Atheism Prevail?

That Agnostheism will eventually and forever cover the earth as the waters cover the seas (as its adherents in Germany and at home so confidently assure us,) is a peril we deem to be visionary; but that a long and dark eclipse of faith may possibly be before us in the future, there are few bold enough to deny. At all events, one of the greatest of all the rocks ahead is this prospect of "atheism among the million?" What will it be like, if we are doomed to see it? Atheism among choice intellects who spend their days over nooks or retorts of fossil bones, whose ruling passion is an abstract theory, and whose besetting sin perhaps a little spite at crypt, philosopher, that is and thoroughly atheism indeed so far as the public is concerned. But we have yet to see what it would be to take a single great city like Liverpool or Sheffield, and begin by extinguishing in the lower classes such lingering traditions of a hope beyond this world and a Supreme Judge as have survived hitherto in the midst of their ignorance and brutality, and then work upward, extinguishing among the women the sparks of religion and patient submission which has lighted so many a dreary lot, robbing from the young men the few solemn thoughts which have served as checks upon passion, and from the old prospects of another world which has made them able to bear the closing shades of mortal life darkened by poverty and disease. Who shall say that the action and reaction of such a change going on simultaneously in the minds of some hundreds of thousands of poor, suffering human creatures would produce? We know what sort of a madness seized the masses when the rotten upper structure of French society fell in with a crash one hundred years ago. But throne and priesthood and nobles together, what are they compared to the downfall of the ideal heaven itself, of all that men have hitherto hoped, or feared, or reverenced, adored, in the unseen world now or hereafter?

Such a change as this, were it to take place in the minds of any considerable section of the nation, must soon revolutionize the whole order of society, and with it the political order of the state. The forms of law, the rights of property, the armies and navies of the commonwealth, the industries of manufacture, agriculture and commerce, and very specially the bonds of marriage, would all, in a greater or less degree, feel the rock or the earthquake. In short, what we have to face is this, if Agnosticism prevail, the present form of society must collapse.—London Standard.

Option Deal.

The Bloomington Pantagraph bitterly mourns the rage in that city for bucket shop deals and dabbling in Mexican mines. Well, let them alone, brother. Some time they will wake up and find themselves wearing summer ulsters in the middle of the winter. If any one in the light of the experience of the past few years is idiot enough to put his money in silver mines or in bucket shop deals we have no sympathy with him, and the sooner he goes to the wall and is obliged to work for a living, the better for him. It seems singular that there are so many fools in the world, but there appears to be no sign of any reduction in the number. There is nothing in this world that takes such accurate knowledge to run properly as mining. But every man who has invested in a chunk of quartz in Colorado dreams that he is on the way to become a bonanza king. Meanwhile the man who has sold him the mine laughs in his sleeve and comes east and purchases a good farm, settles down and takes the world easy. It is one long system of gulling from one end to another. Many men have gone from central Illinois to the mines, in the last few years. What of them? The successful ones can be told on one's fingers. The unsuccessful ones are scattered. Some of them sleep in unknown and neglected graves; some of them are working away trying to get home, and some of them have returned, glad to get back. The whole thing is a delusion and, to the many, a fraud. By and by the people will wake up to a realization of the fact that it takes about a dollar's worth of labor to get a dollar out of the ground, whether it be from the bowels of the earth in the shape of a carbonate, or taken from the top in the shape of a potato, and that in the long run the potato has the most money in it. There is nothing in the line of speculation that will discount saving and working at home, and the sooner the ordinary man learns this fact the better it will be for him. Especially is this true of the man with no capital. The most foolish thing he can do is to go to the mines without the special knowledge of mining that makes it a trade. It has to be learned as all other things do, and when a man must learn it by working for others for his daily bread, it is a hard job.—Peoria Journal.

THE WHITE HOUSE.—The White House was first built in 1792, at a cost of $330,000. It was not occupied until 1800. It was rebuilt in 1815, and reoccupied in 1818. Its porticoes were not finished until 1829. Altogether it is computed to have cost for building, rebuilding, and furnishing, about $1,700,000. The great east room for full dress receptions, measuring 80x40 feet, was finished about 50 years ago. The whole establishment has a frontage of 170 feet, and a depth of 68 feet, and its vestibule is 50x40 feet. The garden and park which enclose the mansion occupy 20 acres. The cabinet room, 40x30, is on the second floor. It contains a long table with leather seated chairs, one or two paintings, and a large map of the United States. The picture of Frank Carpenter's "Emancipation Proclamation" gives a good view of the cabinet chamber.

A MAN WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y
is The Great Connecting Link between the East and the West!

Its main line runs from Chicago to Council Bluffs, passing through Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline, Rock Island, Davenport, West Liberty, Iowa City, Marengo, Brooklyn, Grinnell, Des Moines (the capital of Iowa), Stuart, Atlantic, and Avoca; with branches from Bureau Junction to Peoria; Wilton Junction to Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Eldon, Belknap, Centreville, Princeston, Trenton, Gallatin, Cameron, Leavenworth, Atchison, and Kansas City; Washington to Sigourney, Oskaloosa, and Knoxville; Keokuk to Farmington, Bonaparte, Bentonsport, Independent, Eldon, Ottumwa, Eddyville, Oskaloosa, Pella, Monroe, and Des Moines; Mt. Zion to Keosauqua; Newton to Monroe; Des Moines to Indianola and Winterset; Atlantic to Griswold and Audubon; and Avoca to Harlan and Carson. This is positively the only Railroad, which owns, and operates a through line from Chicago into the State of Kansas.

Through Express Passenger Trains, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, are run each way daily between CHICAGO and PEORIA, KANSAS CITY, COUNCIL BLUFFS, LEAVENWORTH and ATCHISON. Through cars are also run between Milwaukee and Kansas City, via the "Milwaukee and Rock Island Short Line."

What will please you most will be the pleasure of enjoying your meals, while passing over the beautiful prairies of Illinois and Iowa, in one of our magnificent Dining Cars that accompany all Through Express Trains. You get an entire meal, as good as is served in any first-class hotel, for seventy-five cents.

Appreciating the fact that a majority of the people prefer separate apartments for different purposes (and the immense passenger business of this line warranting it), we are pleased to announce that this Company runs Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars for sleeping purposes, and Palace Dining Cars for eating purposes only. One other great feature of our Palace Cars is a SMOKING SALOON where you can enjoy your "Havana" at all hours of the day.

Magnificent Iron Bridges span the Mississippi and Missouri rivers at all points crossed by this line, and transfers are avoided at Council Bluffs, Kansas City, Leavenworth and Atchison, connections being made in Union Depots.

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders
It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it is regarded, stands it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.
The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.
WHAT IT CURES.
ALL SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, PILES, INFLAMMATION of LUNGS and BOWELS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, CHILBLAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, FELONS, SPELAS, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all disorders attendant with INFLAMMATION.
It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.
Over 40 Years
This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cure which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

The Turf in 1880.

The trotting statistics of 1880 show that at no previous period in turf history had such important events transpired as during that season. The work of the American trotter, in '80 was gratifying in the result and rich in harvest, with every indication pointing to a more brilliant future; for, with 2-year-olds trotting in 2:25, and 3-year-olds in 2:10, it is not easy to fix the limit within the possibilities. During the season 266 animals trotted in 2:30 or better, of which 134 did so for the first time, while 72 reduced their previous records. The remaining 60 only equaled performances before made, without lowering the time. First of all is Maud S. (2:10¼,) she having in her first season outdone all others. In 1877 the little chestnut stallion Hanoi (2:17¾) created a sensation by running (2:19¼) as a "green one," it being the first time 2:20 was ever beaten under like circumstances; but Maud S., when two years younger, does the mile nine seconds faster, with ease. And the bay mare Hattie Woodward (2:15¼) scores mile 4½ seconds quicker than did Hanoi, she being a year younger than he was then. So even Trinket (2:19¼) at three years under the age of Hanoi often he accomplished what was held a great feat, does better. Of the horses under the 2:30 list in 1880 twenty-three trotted in 2:20 or better; all, with the exception of Hopeful (2:14¼), Darby (2:16¼,) and Santa Claus (2:18,), lowering their records. The best time by Hopeful was 2:15¼). Darby and Santa Claus succeeded in equaling their best in 1879 without going better, as did Doty (2:21), Voltaire (2:21), Post-Boy (2:23¼), Nellie Irwin (2:23), Ella Earl (2:25), Wagner's Bashaw (2:26), and John R. (2:28). A significant feature of the list is the number of young ones to be found in it, California alone furnishing seven that are 4-years old or under. The following are the horses that trotted better than 2:25 for the first time in the season of 1880, with the time and place of the race:

Hattie Woodward, b. m., Buffalo, Aug. 7, 2:15¼.

Mothers Don't Know—How many children are punished for being uncouth, wilful, and indifferent to instructions or rewards, simply because they are out of health! An intelligent lady said of a child of this kind: "Mothers should know that if they would give the little ones moderate doses of Hop Bitters for two or three weeks, the children would be all a parent could desire."

St. Vitus's Dance.

This peculiar disorder, now but rarely met with, was once widely prevalent in Germany and the Low Countries, where its diffusion appears to have been greatly encouraged by the fondness of the people for hysterical and superstitious excitement. The "dancing mania," as it has been called, was practiced until a kind of general frenzy seemed to have seized the people, many of whom entirely lost control over their motions. Jan, of Konigshaven, an old German chronicler, thus describes the epidemic as it appeared at Strasburg:

"At Strasburg hundreds of folks began
To dance and leap, both maid and man;
In open market, lane, or street,
They skipped along, nor cared to eat,
Until their plague had ceased to fright us—
'Twas called the dance of Holy Vitus."

The name appears to have been derived from the supposed power of St. Vitus over nervous and hysteric affections.

The pranks indulged in by persons afflicted with this mania were for some time ascribed to demoniacal possession. Even the great Paraclesus, who effected many cures by medicinal remedies, in which cold water was a prominent agent, for a time encouraged the popular belief, no doubt wishing in some cases to operate on his patients through the imagination. He therefore prescribed in these special instances that "the patient was to make an image of himself in wax or resin, and by an effort of thought to concentrate all his blasphemies and sins in it, without the intervention of any other person; to set his whole mind and thoughts concerning these oaths in the image; and when he had succeeded in this, he was to burn the image, so that not a particle of it should remain."

St. Vitus's dance, which raged in the countries we have mentioned from the fourteenth to the sixteenth century, began to decline as the progress of enlightenment calmed the minds of men, and freed them from their delusions. It is now only known as a form of disease which occurs chiefly among children, but is generally capable of successful treatment under proper conditions, while in many cases it is outgrown as the child advances in age.

Worth Remembering.

Now that good times are again upon us, it is worth remembering that no one can enjoy the pleasantest surroundings if in bad health. There are hundreds of miserable people going about to-day with disordered stomach, liver or kidney, when a bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic would do them more good than all the medicines they have ever tried.

A Delightful Novelty.

Don't Dream.

Sleep to be most refreshing, should be dreamless. Use Brown's Iron Bitters, and you will enjoy healthful, dreamless slumber. It strengthens every part of the body, and is very soothing in its effect on the brain and nervous system. It is the best medicine in the world, and assists nature in removing all the symptoms of ill-health.

THE poet Whittier has written for the Wide Awake a tender and exquisite poem commemorative of the children's love for Longfellow, and of Longfellow's death. It will appear in the May number, together with a fine frontispiece portrait of Longfellow, engraved by Closson.

What Everybody Wants.

Is a reliable medicine that never does any harm and that prevents and cures disease by keeping the stomach in order, the bowels regular, and the kidneys and liver active. Such a medicine is Parker's Ginger Tonic. It relieves every case, and has cured thousands. See other column.—Tribune.

THE SURGEON'S KNIFE.

Mr. Simeon Tietsell, of Saugerties, N. Y., had been treated for seven years by various physicians for what they call Stricture of the Urethra, without benefit. He finally consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Roundout, N. Y., who found his trouble to be Urinary Calculi or Stones in the Bladder. The doctor at once removed the foreign bodies with the knife and then gave his great Blood Specific "Favorite Remedy," to prevent their reformation. The entire treatment was eminently successful, and Mr. Tietsell's recovery was rapid and perfect.

While "Favorite Remedy" is a specific in all Kidney and Bladder Diseases, it is equally valuable in cases of Bilious Disorders, Constipation of the Bowels, and all the class of ills apparently inseparable from the constitution of woman. Try it. Your druggist has it, and the cost is only one dollar a bottle. The lucky man is he who puts this advice in practice. Don't forget the name and address, Dr. David Kennedy, Roundout, N. Y. The Doctor would have it understood that, while he is engaged in the introduction of his medicine, "Favorite Remedy," he will continue the practice of his profession, but confines himself exclusively to office practice. He treats all diseases of a chronic character, and performs all the minor and capital operations of surgery.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

CLINTON.

Ed. Rose spent Sunday in town.

Mrs. Mary Freese of Blissfield is visiting at Mr. E. W. Freese's.

Charlie Burroughs arrived here Saturday night to spend a few days.

The Episcopal social at Fred Kilby's Tuesday evening was a very pleasant affair.

Mrs. Hardy and daughter of Adrian, were the guests of Dr. Alvord a few days last week.

Prof. Dixon leaves Clinton this week to join his troupe for the summer campaign.

The woolen mill closed Tuesday morning for an indefinite time. The engineer refused to work until the machinery was repaired.

Rev. I. M. Frey started Monday for the east, where he intends to make a two weeks visit. His pulpit will be unoccupied next Sunday.

The dramatic entertainment given by the pupils of the high school department last Saturday evening was a decided success. "The school ma'am" was played, and though there was but little weight to the play, each character was excellently represented. The hall was crowded, and considering the low admission fee, the proceeds, forty-five dollars, were quite large.

The sickness of Mr. John P. Silvers, reported last week, resulted in his death, Friday morning. The funeral services were held Sunday afternoon at the Congregational church. Rev. Geo. Wilson was called from Hudson to conduct the services. Nearly five hundred friends assembled to pay the last tribute of respect to the one who for half a century had lived among them. Too much cannot be said of his many noble qualities of mind and heart, and while we mourn his loss we feel that he has reached the land where peace abides and sorrow is unknown.

"Tell us life's pleasures with death are still rife.
Tell us that death ever leadeth to life;
Life is our labor, and death is our rest,
If happy the living, the dead are the blest."

John P. Silvers, the subject of these lines, was born in Sussex Co., state of New Jersey, April 14th, 1803. In 1832 at the age of 29 yrs., he with his wife and four children came to the territory of Michigan and bought the farm on which he has ever since lived, and where he died last Friday morning at the ripe age of 79 years. His life has been one of mingled joys and sorrows. Seven years after he came here his first wife, Jeanett Hooper, died, leaving him with four children to care for in a new country and the inconveniences incident to a frontier life. He shortly married again, but only to be made desolate by the loss of his second wife, Marcia Hurlburt, after the lapse of only a few short years and with now a large family of motherless children to watch over and provide for. In 1857 he again married, and only two years ago this coming summer, death took his third wife from his side and left him once more alone. And thus it has been, one affliction after another, following in rapid succession. But amidst all these heavy burdens and trials, his great heart and manly spirit never quaked or faltered. His whole life has been one of heroic self sacrifice and devotion to his family. He manfully faced all the privations and hardships of an emphatically pioneer life with the courage and patience of a hero. The broad acres he purchased and improved and beautified into one of the handsomest and most valuable farms in Lenawee Co., he loved and occupied until death. In the earlier history of this township he held for many years various important offices, and always discharged his official duties with satisfaction to others, and with a just sense of the obligations resting upon him. In politics he was a lifelong Jeffersonian Democrat. And in public, so in private matters he never sacrificed a principle of his manhood, or compromised in the least his sacred honor. He was in every sense one of God's own true noblemen. With earth, John P. Silvers is no more, but the bright and worthy example he set in a long and spotless life remains. His deeds of charity, his many acts of love, the words of good cheer and encouragement he spoke to all shall live forever. And if everyone to whom he has lent a helping hand, to whom he has addressed some kind fatherly word, on whom he has conferred some blessing, should drop a blossom on his grave, he would sleep to-night beneath a pyramid of flowers. His life's work is done. His labors are ended. He rests to-day peacefully, quietly and undisturbed, beneath the clods of the beautiful valley which in life he loved so well. Honored in life, reverenced in death. There is, there was, no truer, nobler man. M.

RIDGEWAY.

The farmers are not able to do much plowing yet.

Who has lost a gent's kid glove? Mr. Wickham has an odd one.

George W. Smith has been very sick with spinal fever, but is improving.

Alfred Moser received a severe kick from a horse while shoeing it, which laid him up for a day or two.

G. W. Jackson's father, who lives near Pennington's corners, is quite sick again.

Sam'l Snedecor, who has been with his son Courtlain in Isabella Co., for the last year, is out on a short visit.

The resolution to change the voting place from the village to Britton, was by motion laid over until next fall, to be voted upon then by ballot.

The gravel has been obtained sufficient to gravel the turnpike from the village to the station and all that remains to be done is to raise the money necessary to distribute it. Now is the time to do it. Will it be done?

Fletcher moved into his new house and lot last week. Geo. Allison now resides at the foot of the hill, Rilo now takes his pancakes in a tenant house of Solomon Smith, Tin wakes up in the morning in the Mary Ann Barrett house, Miles Osterhout is tenanting with Fletcher, and Wm. Larkin takes the place of Chet. Bronson, all of which changes have taken place on south Ridge street recently, there being eighteen family residents, twelve of which have moved within nine months. How is that for a circulating medium?

The poles for the telegraph line from the station are set and the wire will be strung within a few days.

George Scholle, who has been a great sufferer for the past 9 months, being afflicted with an abcess, died Sunday evening. The funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon and were attended by a large number of friends and acquaintances.

The temperance addresses given by Rev. Mr. Kershow and Rev. Jesse Kilpatrick last Sunday evening were among the best. The lecture given Tuesday evening on the same subject by Mr. Hough, state lecturer of the Sons of Temperance was well received by all, unless our lone druggist took exception and it is presumed he did.

Again two deaths have occurred in the same family within 24 hours. Mrs. Bodine, a sister of Nelson and Lewis Miller, who for the past year have taken care of Aunt Patty Miller, died suddenly Thursday morning, March 30, resulting from heart disease. Mrs. Miller had for several years been very feeble and many had been surprised at her unusual vitality. The death of Mrs. Bodine was a great shock to her, such as her weak condition could not sustain, and about midnight, attendants went to her bedside to find that, instead of sleeping quietly as supposed, the spirit had left its house of clay, death having releaved the patient sufferer. The funeral services of the first mentioned took place at the house, Saturday afternoon, the interment being at Clinton. The other service was held Sunday at the church, at the regular hour, at which a large number of friends and neighbors were present.

If your correspondent is not heard from next week, it may be understood that he has left the country until after house cleaning.

BROOKLYN.

Flowers bloomed profusely Easter morning, and the faint glimmer of sunshine that strayed by mistake through the chancel window, saved them from the fate of "blushing unseen" at the early service which was largely attended. Some are disposed to speak lightly of what they call the fuss and parade that attends this custom of commemorating Christ's resurrection from death, and its all right that they should, for if it were not for the fuss made, ten chances to one they would forget all about it. When one's attention is called to the fact that the world has a Savior they are apt to think they are part of the world and worth saving. This was not what Rev. Eichbaume said this morning, and you will have to guess what he talked about, for instead of listening as I should, I was wandering where and how many were sitting in days half twilight, listening to the same anthem and story, and if in that fateful garden people were keeping this anniversary, that more than any other, seems to be a mark of short division in life's arithmetic, separating last year's memories from next year's frailties. The rain did not quite fall till we got home, and then a long continued shower made many remain there. PEARLIE.

Blissfield Advance: Mrs. Chas. Wilcox, nee Ella Wheeler, daughter of George Wheeler, of this village, is a much deceived woman if all reports are true. About a year ago she was married to Chas. Wilcox, then employed in a saw-mill at Tecumseh. Except for short stays at Tecumseh with her husband, she has lived with her parents here, getting things in readiness for housekeeping. While doing this her husband sought the smiles of another woman and on Saturday last married her. Mrs. Wilcox No. 1, hearing of this, at once went to Tecumseh, arriving on the same train her husband and wife No. 2 departed for more congenial quarters.

I wish to say to you that I have been suffering for the last five years with a severe itching all over. I have heard of Hop Bitters and have tried it. I have used up four bottles, and it has done me more good than all the doctors and medicines that they could use on or with me. I am old and poor but feel to bless you for such a relief by your medicine and from torment of the doctors. I have had fifteen doctors at me. One gave me seven ounces of solution of arsenic; another took four quarts of blood from me. All they could tell was that it was skin sickness. Now, after these four bottles of your medicine, my skin is well, clean and smooth as ever.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

A WISE LITTLE GIRL.

"Come hither, you madcap darling!"
I said to my four-year-old,
"Pray what will be done to the bad, bad girl
Who will not do as she's told?
Too well you love your own wee way,
While little you love to mind;
[illegible]
And yet, O she always is kind?

So I told her of "Casablanca"
And the fearful burning ship,
"Do you think," said I, "such a child as this
His mother would have to whip?"
And my heart went out with the story sad
Of this boy so nobly brave,
Who would not dare to disobey,
Even his life to save.

Then her eyes grew bright as the morning,
And they seemed to look me through.
Ah—ah, thought I, you understand
The lesson I tried to teach.
"Now what do you think of this lad, my Love"
Tell all that is in your heart."
"I think," she said, "he was very good,
But he wasn't the least bit smart."

Laughter and Smiles.

BY GEO. BOCKLEY.

That ancient poet, Peter Pindar, wisely said that "Every time a man smiles, much more so when he laughs, he adds some fragment to his small portion of life."

Men and women have various ways of laughing, and I am inclined to think that in many cases it is almost as clear an index of character and disposition as can be deduced from phrenology or any other science.

I shall not, however, enter into a scientific dissertation on the subject, nor try to explain why man laughs, nor how he laughs.

One thing we know—that man does laugh; and Buffon, or Cuvier, or some one else, has said that he is the only animal that laughs.

In all our intercourse with dumb animals, perhaps not one of us ever saw anything like a smile, or heard anything like a laugh amongst them. They have various ways of showing their happiness and [illegible] ing lip and the joyous peal belong not to them.

The horse neighs in anticipation of his oats; but I have seen some human beings do the same thing as they filed off to dinner to the tune of "The roast beef of Merrie England."

The mastiff wags his tail when his master pats him on the head; that may be his way of laughing, and a very quiet and sensible way it is.

The hog gives short, spasmodic grunts of appreciation, when he buries his nose in his food—a rather unpoetical laugh, no doubt; but for all that, I have known some fat old gentlemen who laughed somewhat in the same manner—deep and gutterally—like the rolling intonations of distant thunder.

I am not quite certain whether bears, tigers, or hyenas laugh or not; they show their teeth at all events, but not in a very pleasing manner, I believe.

The laughter of the birds is music—sweet as the smile of childhood and pure as the song of angels; in grove and in bower they carol forth their happiness, calling all nature to witness that their little hearts are overflowing with joy.

"The red-breast from his yellow beak Trills out the joy he cannot speak."

"Chick-a-de-dee!" cries out one little fellow not bigger than a thimble, and anon he is answered by another little jay from a neighboring bush, with whom he is playing bo-peep.

Far away in the glens and woods of fatherland, the cuckoo gladdens hearts of old and young with his pleasant voice:

"Sweet bird! thy bower is ever green,
Thy sky is ever clear;
Thou hast no sorrow in thy song,
No winter in thy year."

I do not know how it may be with some people; but to me the mention of the word "cuckoo" brings visions of happy days and fairy scenes long passed away, when I wandered truant and alone, o'er hills and through valleys melodious with the song of birds.

"But what," in the name of folly, you may ask, "has all this to do with laughter?" You know it is hard to speak of birds, babies or bonnets without getting sentimental and feeling a kind of all-overishness about one's self. Why, I once heard of a man who spent a whole week apostrophizing a kid-glove he had picked up, under the impression that the owner of it was a charming creature with golden tresses, rosy lips, pearly teeth and all that sort of thing; but after all, she turned out to be a "colored person," with a flat, cartilaginous nose, and most excruciating heels; and to crown all, an old woman called him a "daft loon."

Laughter, like language, is the prerogative of the human family; it enables us to express our joy and approval, and sometimes our hate, more completely than by words alone.

"Here's a sigh for those who love me,
And a smile for those who hate."

Laughter is the safety-valve to the pent up happiness of the heart; it is a visible manifestation of the thinking mind; the electric flash of passing thought—the language of love, and the chord that more closely binds friendship.

Conversation derives half its charms from the smiles that accompany it; wit and repartee, no matter how brilliant, would be powerless to please if we could not see each other smile and hear each other laugh; social intercourse would be dull and insipid if we could, not indulge in a hearty laugh once in a while.

Just observe what a happy effect the arrival of some jolly visitor will have on a whole family when he enters with a broad grin of delight upon his face, and good nature in every tone of his voice. The little ones all catch the smile, and old grandpa, in his arm chair beside the fire, welcomes the stranger with laughing tones, and the whole house rings with merriment. They cannot help themselves; laughter is contagious, and infects all who come within its happy influence.

Lord Chesterfield condemned audible laughter as being vulgar; but how can we help ourselves from bursting into a round of haw-haws, when our neighbor is well nigh bursting with fun?

"Laughter," says Dr. Johnson, "is convulsive merriment;" and I agree with him, for when one does get fairly started to laugh, it is hardly in his power to "pull up." I have seen people—and I dare say you have seen people—laugh until the tears streamed from their eyes, and their faces swelled and became of a purple hue from what might be called an "agony of fun."

There are various ways of laughing and smiling in the world, and I will now mention and endeavor to illustrate some of them.

smile of the sleeping infant is perhaps the purest of all smiles. Wrapt in innocent slumber, smiles break over its face without a seeming cause, and from this is derived the beautiful idea that infants hold converse with the angels. You have all heard or read the beautiful lyric of the Angel's Whisper, in which the poet speaks of a young mother watching beside the cot of her sleeping babe, while her husband was far off "on the wild raging sea," and the fond parent fancying that the angels were whispering to her child, robbed to tell them to "watch o'er its father," who was then encountering the perils of wind and wave.

Its soft, sweet trust, its voice that knows no guile;
Letting its pleased and wondering gaze roll—
Offering to life, on all sides, its young soul."

Boys and girls get up laughter at amazingly low figures, and when they laugh there is no hypocrisy about it. A penny whistle, two cents and a jack-knife will make a week's fun for a boy; and a wax-doll, a skipping rope and a few pieces of broken china-ware will keep a girl laughing all day long. "Children of larger growth" are not so easily pleased.

I will now speak of the "good natured laugh." This sort of laugh is quite common. If you are in prosperous circumstances, your friends and acquaintances always greet you with a sweet smile of congratulation; if you go with a companion on a journey, and some misfortune happens to you, he will try to soften the calamity by good natured laughter.

Two sportsmen were once hunting together; having to get over a high wall, one of them, in doing so, broke his leg. On looking up at his more fortunate companion, he was shocked to see him smiling, as he thought, at his misfortune. This looked rather unkind, and he cried out, "What! you laugh, and my leg broken?" "Yes," said the other, "I was so pleased that it was not your neck that I could not help smiling." Now this was an exhibition of good nature, though perhaps not in very good taste.

Genuine, good natured laughter is highly commendable; but there is a great deal of [illegible] among mankind "a spurious imitation."

When ladies go shopping—which happens pretty often—the clerk welcomes them to his counter with a sweet, insinuating smile that would "coax the birds off the bushes." But depend upon it his bows and wreathed smiles have a purpose in them, as you sometimes find out when he has induced you to buy something you really did not want, because the knight of the yard stick was so fascinating and obliging.

In like cordial manner "mine host" of the hotel greets his customers with a smile—runs to lift young ladies out of Pa's wagon, takes their cloaks upon his arm and ushers them into his sitting room, with the air of one who is all alive to their wants.

Well, I like to see every man of business act politely towards all who come in contact with him—even though it may be mere assumption. Whoever has the art of pleasing in an eminent degree cannot but be successful in business, and all young men, and young women too, should study how to have a smiling countenance and polite behavior until both became, as it were, part of their nature.

Sometimes it may not be possible to maintain a pleasant countenance and a cheerful tone of voice.

"For 'tis hardly in a body's power
To keep at times from looking sour."

But you can try, and you will find that the more you try the easier it will become.

"Now and then," says Addison, "you meet with a person so exactly formed to please, that he will gain upon every one who hears or holds him: this disposition is not merely the gift of nature, but frequently the effect of much knowledge and a continual over the passions."

Just so! command the passions, and the face will soon be radiant with smiles—the temper amiable and winning. If you ladies desire a beautiful countenance such as no cosmetics can produce, cherish and cultivate a cheerful disposition; and then, no matter whether your features be Grecian or Roman, your complexion blonde or brunette, you will have a charm independent both of color and form that will gain the admiration of all with whom you come in contact. On the other hand if you will be ugly, and have all who see you say "I do not like her," knit your brows, frown at all who look at you, snap when you are spoken to, let your department be cold and supercilious, and you will have the reputation of being a sour-visaged, nasty, disagreeable, ill-natured thing.

I come now to ill-natured laughter.

To laugh at another's misfortune, or to jest at human suffering, no matter what that suffering or misfortune may arise from, is devilish.

Sheridan says, "To smile at the jest which plants a thorn in another's breast, is to become a principal in the mischief." And yet how often we see deformed and suffering humanity made the subject of mirth; how often we hear laughter that has not a [illegible] in it but [illegible] that convey nothing but agony to the hearts of others.

Let us but remember the fable of the frogs which the boys were stoning, when one of the frogs spoke up and said, "What is fun to you is death to us," and we can never more take pleasure in the pain of any living thing.

There are smiles that never spring from joy—smiles that hide broken hearts and wounded spirits.

"Some smile who never more will know
One hour without its sorrow;
Gay words are often said by those
Who tremble for to-morrow;
And many a smile that lights the face,
And many a gay word spoken,
Are meant to hide despair within,
And hearts by sorrow broken."

The next kind of smile I will allude to is "the smile of betrayal"—such a smile as is practiced by those who ask you "How are you, to-day, my brother?" and then stab you under the fifth rib. This is the worst of all smiles; it has the look of murder about it, and is found only in perfection when such monsters as Judas Iscariot or Benedict Arnold curse the earth with their foul and unholy presence. When a person greets you with this kind of "grin"—I will not dignify it by the name of smile, be assured he has some sinister design upon you.

The laughter of the sot, the laughter of the madman, are species of laughter that I will not torture you by attempting to describe.

The sentimental smile is the next I will call attention to. Very young gentlemen, who think themselves over head and ears in love, and young ladies just beginning to read Byron and fashionable novels, and to write billet-doux, make use of this smile. It is a soft simper, something betwen a sigh and a smile, and meant to be most tender and fascinating. You would think butter would not melt in their mouths, and that they were too fragile to risk a puff of wind—their aspirations soft as the breath of flowers—their speech like the dulcet tones of an Æolian lyre! It is a question not very easily answered—what are such folks good for? Watch one of these frail creatures as she reclines on the lounge all for want of having something to do. A young lady affected with this malady describes her feelings and courts sympathy in these words:

"Simpering, sighing, Lisping, crying,"

"My heart is sick, my heart is sad,
But, oh! the cause I dare not tell;
I am not grieved, I am not glad,
I am not sick, I am not well;
I'm not myself—I'm not the same;
I am miffed I know not what;
I'm changed in all, except in name—
Oh! when shall I be changed in that."

Of course "There is a time to weep and a time to laugh—a time to mourn and a time to dance." The wise alone can know the proper time. I am quite aware that extreme levity of speech and behavior is productive of much harm, and that "The loud laugh proclaims the vacant mind."

But let us always be happy and always cheerful, so far as consistent with the other duties of life, and in the end it will turn out that our hearts and lives will be better than if we had all along maintained the rigidity of countenance and gravity of speech befitting only the sourest of monastic devotees. It is a true saying that "A troubled mind is often relieved by maintaining a cheerful countenance."

There must be a relaxation from the cares and perplexities of life betimes, or the body will sink and the mind become morbid and confused. "Too much care once killed a cat," and no doubt it has killed many a man, as well as poor puss.

I grant that "man was made to mourn;" but he was also made to laugh; and if he laugh in the proper place, at a proper time and in a proper manner, it can never be wrong—and why? Because to do so is to follow the dictates of our human nature.

Rogers Park, Ill. Dec. 1880.

Adulterated Teas.

It is pretty generally known that the teas prepared in the East for America and European consumption are adulterated, but comparatively few people are aware of the extent to which this adulteration is carried on, or what substances are used. M. Hussen, a French chemist of note, has made thorough investigation of the subject, and the result of his researches has been laid before the Academy of Science. He finds that Prussian blue, indigo and gypsum, in small quantities, are the principal ingredients employed to impart the "face," or "bloom," to teas, and that in the proportions used they are very innocuous. This adulteration takes places where the plants are raised; but more extensive adulteration is subsequently indulged in by the Europeans, who, with their superior knowledge, have surpassed the Asiatics in their fraud by the use of still more dangerous drugs, such as chromate of lead and arsenicate of copper, besides making use of comparitively innocuous substances, such as sulphate of iron, stearites, carbonates of lime and magnesia. The Chinese have become most expert in manipulating green teas, which they color with a few simple substances, some of them poisonous—for example, plumbago, Prussian blue, curcuma and kaolin. With or without the true leaf of the shrub, they can produce a tea of any desired tint. In order to give the inferior or false leaf the aroma of the tea, the Celestials mix a quantity of it with certain flowers, especially a species of olive. In short, according to M. Hussen, no injurious proceeding is omitted in the Celestial empire to palm on the outer barbarian inferior or false teas. In the leading tea-growing districts the government has a corps of inspectors who are required to see that the goods are dispatched in a pure state. The precaution, however, avails little—for at the shipping ports there is no attempt to prevent the merchants, or brokers from commencing their fraudulent practices, which they carry on to their heart's content.

Use of Dress.

No matter what man may write or say upon the subject, the womanly woman will always pay considerable attention to her dress, as she should. Indifference and consequent inattention to dress often show pedantry, self-righteousness or indolence. It is not a virtue, but a defect in the character. Every woman should study to make the best of herself with the means at her command. Among the rich the love of dress promotes some degree of exertion and display of taste in themselves, and fosters ingenuity and industry in inferiors; in the middle classes it engenders contrivance, diligence, neatness of hand; among the humbler it has its good effects. So long as dress merely interests, amuses, occupies such time and such means as we can reasonably allot to it, it is salutary; refining the tastes and the habits, and giving satisfaction and pleasure to others.

Sensible men like to see their wives and daughters well dressed, and take pride in their appearance. The woman who has not some natural taste in dress, some love of novelty, some delight in the combination of colors, must be deficient in a sense of the beautiful. As a work of art, a well-dressed woman is a study. Consistency, in regard to station and fortune, is the first matter to be considered. A woman of good sense will not wish to expend in unnecessary extravagances money wrung from the hands of an anxious, laborious husband; or if her husband be a man of fortune she will not even encroach upon her allowance. It will be her study to dress well with as little expense as possible; for it is unbecoming to no woman's dignity to be careful of the clothes she wears, and to be economical in her expenditure. When love of dress is indulged in beyond the compass of means, it cannot be too severely condemned. But it is the duty of every woman to dress as well as she can.

A Japanese laborer lives in a house of not more than four rooms; one for eating sleeping, and sitting; one for cooking, one for bathing, and one to spare. He never wears boots or brings mud into the house. He and his family sit on the floor when they eat and take their meals at a low table. The floor of their dining and sitting room is covered with soft mats, upon which at night cotton comforters are spread to sleep under. Such a house can be built and furnished for $100, and, though cheap and small, is comfortable. The bath, found in almost all laborers' houses, is in daily use.

Option Deals.

The Bloomington Pantagraph bitterly mourns the rage in that city for bucket shop deals and dabbling in Mexican mines. Well, let them alone, brother. Some time they will wake up and find themselves wearing summer ulsters in the middle of the winter. If any one in the light of the experience of the past few years is idiot enough to put his money in silver mines or in bucket shop deals we have no sympathy with him, and the sooner he goes to the wall and is obliged to work for a living, the better for him. It seems singular that there are so many fools in the world, but there appears to be no sign of any reduction in the number. There is nothing in this world that takes such accurate knowledge to run properly as mining. But every man who has invested in a chunk of quartz in Colorado dreams that he is on the way to become a bonanza king. Meanwhile the man who has sold him the mine laughs in his sleeve and comes east and purchases a good farm, settles down and takes the world easy. It is one long system of gulling from one end to another. Many men have gone from central Illinois to the mines, in the last few years. What of them? The successful ones can be told on one's fingers. The unsuccessful ones are scattered. Some of them sleep in unknown and neglected graves; some of them are working away trying to get home, and some of them have returned, glad to get back. The whole thing is a delusion and, to the many, a fraud. By and by the people will wake up to a realization of the fact that it takes about a dollar's worth of labor to get a dollar out of the ground, whether it be from the bowels of the earth in the shape of a carbonate, or taken from the top in the shape of a potato, and that in the long run the potato has the most money in it. There is nothing in the line of speculation that will discount saving and working at home, and the sooner the ordinary man learns this fact the better it will be for him. Especially is this true of the man with no capital. The most foolish thing he can do is to go to the mines without the special knowledge of mining that makes it a trade. It has to be learned as all other things do, and when a man must learn it by working for others for his daily bread, it is a hard job.—Peoria Journal.

Facts about Alcohol.

1. Alcohol is a poison. When pure, it will produce death as certainly and almost as quickly as prussic acid.
2. Alcohol is a product of fermentation, or decay. The Creator never made it. No plant produces it. No bubbling spring affords it.
3. Alcohol is an irritant. It will blister the skin and produce inflammation of the stomach.
4. Alcohol is a narcotic. It paralyzes the nerves, and benumbs the sensibilities.
5. Alcohol detroys the blood. It dissolves the blood corpuscles, and thus impoverishes the vital fluid.
6. Alcohol causes heart disease, by changing the heart tissue to fat.
7. Alcohol causes apoplexy. It weakens the blood-vessels, and causes congestion of the brain. Alcohol weakens the muscles. It has been proved by experiment that a man can hit less after taking a glass of whisky than before.
8. Alcohol wastes vital force.
9. Alcohol causes consumption.
10. Alcohol lessens bodily heat. Travelers in the Arctic regions are obliged to be teetotalers.
11. Alcohol causes paralysis of the brain. A man who is dead drunk is temporarily paralyzed.
12. Alcohol hardens the brain.
13. Alcohol produces congestion of every organ of the body.
14. Alcohol hardens the liver, and renders it useless.
15. Alcohol produces its worst effects when taken in small doses.

The following curious piece of composition was placed upon the blackboard of a teacher's institute in Vermont, and a prize of a Webster's dictionary offered to any one who could read it, and pronounce every word correctly. The book was not carried off, however, as twelve was the lowest number of mistakes made in pronunciation:

"A sacrilegious son of Belial, who suffered from bronchitis, having exhausted all his finances, in order to make good the deficit, resolved to ally himself to a comely, lenient and docile young lady of the Malay or Caucasian race. He accordingly purchased a calliope and coral neck-lace of a chameleon hue, and securing a suite of rooms at a principal hotel, he engaged a waiter as his coadjutor; he then despatched a letter in the most unexceptional calligraphy extant, inviting the young lady to a matinee. She revolted at the idea, refused to consider herself sacrificeable to his desires, and sent a polite note of refusal; on receiving which he procured a carbine and a bowie-knife, said he would not now forge fetters hymeneal with the queen, went to an isolated spot, severed his jugular vein, and discharged the contents of his carbine into his abdomen. The debris were removed by the coroner." The following words were mispronounced: Sacrilegious, Belial, bronchitis, exhausted, finances, deficit, comely, lenient, docile, Malay, calliope, chameleon, suite, coadjutor, calligraphy, matinee, sacrificable, carbine, hymeneal, isolated, jugular and debris."

Gentlemen:—My wife has for some time been afflicted with something like a scrofulous disease, and found no relief until she gave your Extract of Red Clover a trial. A correspondent of the St. Paul Pioneer Press was fishing at Nantucket with Rev Robert Collyer, Bob Burdette and several other serious gentlemen. He says; "I cannot refrain from telling a conundrum that was propounded to the four ministers when the blue fish party went ashore at the "pint" and took their picnic dinner under the shade of a fisherwoman's hut. It was, "If Solomon was the son of David, and Joab the son of Zeruiah, what relation was Zeruiah to Joab?" They all said father at once, and when assured that the answer was wrong, there was much curiosity. 'Will you state that again?' asked Mr. Collyer, laying down his fork. It was repeated. 'Well,' said he, 'David and Soloman had nothing to do with it, but Zeruiah was Joab's daddy!' 'No; guess again,' was the reply. The clergy all insisted that the answer was right, and Mr. Collyer said, "He certainly must have been his father, and I won't eat another mouthful until you tell me where the catch is. When told that 'Zeruiah was Joab's mother,' he exhibited much joyousness, and told Powers and Fish he was surprised that they didn't know their Bibles better."

Things as They Are.

As we advance in life the ideal soon hides behind the real. How few things come up to our expectations! Most girls have an ideal husband in view—a kind-hearted, noble man, with the figure of an Apollo and the beauty of an Adonis, who pays the same attention to his wife that he did before their troth was plighted. The real husband is brusque, matter-of-fact, unsentimental; he eats his meals at a down-town restaurant, and only remembers that he is married when he is obliged to pay the household expenses. The ideal housewife is the woman who keeps her home in the most delightful order, who cooks the most delicious dinners, presides at the table with the grace of a queen. The real housewife is a woman whose face is red and blazed with cooking over a hot stove, whose color is cheap and earnest, and who is given to gossip. The ideal baby is a little fellow with the daintiest tinted cheeks, the curliest hair, the sweetest "coo," and with angel's wings just sprouting from his shoulders. The real baby is a young wad of humanity, with open valves, screaming all the time, fuzz on his bald head like thistle-down, and bears no resemblance to an angel. And so it is with everything in life—things are seldom what they seem.

Why the Red Sea is Red.

Geographers were not able to determine why the Red sea was so named until Ehrenberg sailing over a part of it, observed that the water of the whole Gulf of Tor was colored a blood red. Drawing up some of the water, and examining it with a microscope, he found that the color was due to a minute, thread-like oscillatoria or alga. The same alga was observed by Dupont twenty years afterward, giving rise to the same appearance over an extent of 556 nautical miles.

A similar plant was noticed by Darwin, in his voyage around the world, covering the water near Abrolhos island, off the coast of Brazil. Oersted, in 1845, noticed that the water near Maderia had a peculiar obscurity which was occasioned by numerous minute tufts of oscillator.a waving in the mass. These plants are found all the way to the West Indies, sometimes thick enough to give a color to the water, but never wnolly wanting. In other cases, the sea is colored red by animals, of different kinds, by minute crustaceans or infusorie, or eggs. The name red or Vermillion sea has been given to two different microscopic infusorie. One of the coloring animals is irritating to the skin, and produces blisters and sores on the bodies of those who come in contact with it.

Arguzoid.

"Arguzoid" is the name of a new composite metal which has recently made its appearance in Glasgow. It resembles silver and is whiter than nickel; in fact, differ the slightest shade from silver in appearance. It is cast into any shape desired and hammers well; is about half again a much in price as brass; is much cheaper than nickel plating or electro-plating on brass and copper, while it has the advantage of being solid throughout. Its cohesive strength is only surpassed by that of silver. Brass breaks at ten tons, phosphor-bronze at fourteen, while "arguzoid" requires nearly sixteen tons pressure before it succumbs. Its capabilities are to be very thoroughly tested, and if it passes through the trials satisfactorily, an immense field will at once be opened to it, not the least of which will be arguzoid fittings for ocean steamers. Nickel-plating tarnishes quickly at sea; brass is not good enough for high-class vessels, and is hard to clean. It is expected that arguzoid will keep its color, besides being so much cheaper.

Remember This.

Dr. Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., would have you remember that you will avoid mistakes by bearing in mind the name of his new medicine is "Favorite Remedy," and the price one dollar. For the cure of Urinary Difficulties, Kidney Complaints, Constipation of the Bowels, and all those diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females, there is positively no medicine offered to the public at all equal to it. For sale by all Druggists. One Dollar a bottle.

The Blessing of Labor.

I believe that for most men more than eight hours' work per day are required for the maintenance of physical, mental and moral health. I think that for most men, including operatives, mechanics, farmers and clergymen, more than eight hours work per day is necessary, in order to keep down and utilize the forces of the animal passions. I believe that if improvements in machinery should discharge men from the necessity of laboring more than six hours a day, society would rot in measureless and fatal animalism. I have worked more than ten hours a day during most of my life, and believe it is best for us all to be compelled to work. It would be well, I think, if we could make it impossible for an idler to live on the face of the earth. Religious teachers are not without the responsibility for having taught that the necessity of labor is a curse. The world ows most of its growth hitherto to men who tried to do as much work as they could. Its debt is small to the man who wished to do as little as possible.

Woman's Relation to Wine.

It is not generally known how wine was discovered. As women are proverbially the beginning and end of all mischief, it was through a woman that wine was first known. A certain founder of Persopolis, Jemsheed, had a passion for grapes, and desiring to preserve them, placed them in a large vessel deposited in a vault. When opened to eat they had naturally fermented, and the juice was so acid that the vessels in the King's room containing it were labeled "Poison." One of the court ladies had such a frightful headache she tried for death, and seeing the poison label, she swallowed a portion of the contents of a vessel, and thereupon fell into such a delicious sleep that when she awoke she repeated the dose until the king's poison all disappeared. The fair culprit had to confess, and then the king and all his court tried it. So to this day there is known in Persia Zeher-e Koosh—"the delightful poison." The mild wines made now-a-days by women at home are not intoxicating, but many of them are beneficial and medicinal.

Healthy Property of Onions.

The healthy properties of onions have never been fully understood. Lung and liver complaints are certainly benefited, often cured, by a free consumption of onions either cooked or raw. Colds yield to them like magic. Don't be afraid of them. Taken at night, all offence will be gone in the morning, and the good effects will amply compensate for the trifling anoyance. Taken regularly, they promote the health of the lungs and the digestive organs. An extract made by boiling down the juice of onions to a syrup, and taken as a medicine, answers the purpose very well, but fried roasted, or boiled onions are better. Onions are a very cheap medicine, within everybody's reach, and they are not by any means as "bad to take" as the costly nostrums a neglect of their use may necessitate.

THAT SMALL BOY.—A dashing youn, fellow was very attentive to a young lad, who did not secretly favor his attentions and who was blessed with an observin, little brother of only a few summers growth. The young lady's admirer wa visiting her, when the little chap broke into their presence, and mounting the young man's knee, said, "Haven't you got a fine room?" "Oh, yes" proudly replied the dashing young fellow, whose vanit, was evidently touched by the remark; seeing, as he thought, in the circumstance an opportunity to make a favorable impression on the sister, he gave his mustache an extra twist and reiterated his reply with emphasis—"Oh, yes, a very fine room!" "I thought so," said the young hopeful musingly. "But what made you think so?" asked the young lady's admirer, his curiosity by this time fully aroused. "Because," was the crushing reply, "sister Maggie said she liked your room better than your company.'

Mother Died of Salt Rheum.

J. W. Adams, Newark, Ohio, says: "Cuticura Remedies are the greatest medicines on earth. Had the worst case of Salt Rheum in this country.—My mother had it twenty years, and in fact died from it. I believe Cuticura would have saved her life. My arms, breast and head were covered for three years, which nothing relieved or cured until I used the Cuticura Remedies.

A delicious breakfast cake may be made by taking enough bread sponge to make, when risen and baked, a cake about two inches thick; knead into it a piece of butter about the size of half an egg; after it is in the tin put on the top little lumps of butter and then cover it with fine white sugar and ground cinnamon; when baked, there will be a sort of crust over the cake. This is very nice with coffee.

Worth Remembering.

Now that good times are again upon us, it is worth remembering that no one can enjoy the pleasantest surroundings if in bad health. There are hundreds of miserable people going about to-day with disordered stomach, liver or kidney, when a bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic would do them more good than all the medicines they have ever tried.

The Narragansett Indians have executed a quit-claim deed to the State of all their tribal land in the town of Charlestown, in pursuance of a law abolishing tribal relations and authority. Hereafter the members of the tribe will be no longer wards of the State, but will be simply citizens. This is the best possible position for every Indian in every State and every Territory of the United States. The tribal system is a fatal enemy to Indians' progress.

What Everybody Wants.

Is a reliable medicine that never does any harm and that prevents and cures disease by keeping the stomach in order, the bowels regular, and the kidneys and liver active. Such a medicine is Parker's Ginger Tonic. It relieves every case, and has cured thousands. See other column.—Tribune.

PAY YOUR DEBTS.—Nothing is more discouraging to a wife than to find her husband remiss in paying the household debts. It ought to be to every one a pleasure to pay one's bills, as it is to the creditor to receive his dues. And we have always noticed that, whenever there is a lagging behind and a disinclination to pay what we owe, there is a screw loose somewhere. Indeed, we would not give much for the self-respect and reputation of anyone who did not desire to pay his debts when they are due. We, therefore, say to all, pay your debts, especially your household debts, and relieve your wife from any unpleasant thoughts on the subject.

Going to His Grave.

There he goes again direct to a saloon and pours down another heavy draught of strong drink, not so much because his appetite demands it, but for the artifical buoyancy it produces the after effect of which leaves him more miserable than before; it is this dreadful practice that is daily sending thousands to their graves. A remedy for all this is found in the true friend of temperance,—the best and purest of all medicines,—Electric Bitters. Sold by all Druggists at 50 cents.

I always keep your medicines in stock. Downs' Elixir is selling better than any Cough Medicine I have, and with good results. C. M. Smith, Druggist, Clarkston, Mich.

Dr. Baxter's Mandrake Bitters give the best satisfaction of any medicine I sell. They have advertised themselves and I warrant every bottle. N. De-Kruif, Druggist, Zeeland, Mich.

Henry & Johnson's Arnica and Oil Liniment, for external use is equally good.

A Wisconsin man has experimented with potato-seed for more than twenty years. He has concluded that it is best to plant small potatoes whole, selecting the most perfect specimens of the variety to be raised. He thinks if all would adopt this plan, we would hear less of potatoes running out. He had planted the White Peachblow for twelve years or more, and the last crop was after than the first.

F. C. Engle, Druggist, says: 'Rinehart's Worm Lozenges excel everything else for Worms, I cannot keep store without them.'

The average yield of corn, says the New York Times, is less than one-half of the possible yield. When one thinks how little the second half of 100 bushels of corn costs per acre, the profit of growing such a crop becomes apparent; and it is easy to produce such a yield. One wants the right kind of corn, good land, and a little extra work in cultivation. The cost of the land, and of planting and tending the crop, is the same for 2 bushels as for 100 bushels per acre.

ARTHURS' HOME MAGAZINE.

A NEW YEAR
—WITH—
New and Increased Attractions!

The Home Magazine occupies, and has always occupied a field especially its own. While gathering for its pages from the whole range of general literature, the editor and his efficient co-laborers exercise the most careful discrimination in regard to quality and influence. Nothing is admitted which in their view, can give false ideas of life, or weaken the bonds of virtue. No matter what may be the reputation, nor how brilliant the talents of the writer, if his moral teachings are at all questionable, they can not find a place in our magazine.—And beyond this, its publishers claim that in its peculiar character and varied departments it is more thoroughly identified with the people in their every-day life and home and social interests than any other first-class periodical.

The Home Magazine for 1882 will be the most interesting and attractive that has yet appeared.

TECUMSEH, MICH., APR. 13, 1882.

It has been generally understood that P. T. Barnum, the veteran showman was a staunch temperance man. We regret to learn therefore that he is falling from grace. His mammoth elephant, Jumbo, recently purchased in London, chews plug tobacco and drinks whiskey and beer by the pailful.

The notorious bandit, Jesse James, has finally paid the penalty of his crimes, having been shot down like a dog by one of his own gang. Chas. Ford, the man who shot him, claims to be a detective, having joined the gang about a year ago, for the purpose of capturing the James boys. He now claims the reward which has been offered for Jesse.

If any supervisor or other assessing officer of any township or city shall willfully assess any property at more or less than what he believes to be its true cash value, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof he shall be punished by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one year, or by fine not exceeding three hundred dollars, at the discretion of the court.

The debate in Congress upon the new apportionment bill brought out some interesting figures in regard to the last census. Colorado has made the largest percentage of gain during the decade—387 per cent.; Nebraska scores 268 per cent.; Kansas, 173 per cent. and Texas 94 per cent. Texas has made the largest actual gain, having added three quarters of a million to her population, and increased her representatives in the house from six to eleven congressmen. Vermont shows the smallest gain, being only one-half per cent.

Uncle Samuel Tilden's right hand has not forgotten its cunning, and his mental faculties seem as sharp as ever. In a letter to the Jeffersonian club of New Haven, he concludes a strong epistle with this vigorous language:

In a period when there seems to be little respect for the limitations of power prescribed by our written constitution; when assumptions of ungranted authority are rife in all departments of the Federal government; when that government is gradually changed into an elective despotism, meddling in everything belonging to the states, or to individuals; when every new assumption of ungranted power creates new opportunities, new faculties, and new incentives to favoritism and jobbery; when the civil service has been converted into the balance of power to determine elections by pecuniary and other illegitimate influences; when perversion of high public trusts to the private gain of an official is frequently committed with apparent unconsciousness of wrong, and passes almost without rebuke, it is time the teachings and example of Thomas Jefferson be invoked to keep alive the glimmering spark of official virtue and public honor.

The new tax law provides for the establishment of a Board of Review, consisting of two persons, who shall meet with the supervisor to review and correct the tax roll, after the assessment shall have been taken. This is the provision of the statute:

Sec. 18. After the annual township meeting and on or before the first Monday in May in each year the township board shall appoint two suitable tax-paying electors of the township to serve as members of the board of review for that year, who shall take the constitutional oath of office. The supervisor and the two electors so appointed shall constitute the board of review for such township. On the Tuesday next following the third Monday of May the board of review of each township shall meet at the office of the supervisor; at which time the supervisor shall submit to said board the assessment roll for the current year, as prepared by him, and the said board shall proceed to examine and review the same, and during that week said board, of its own motion, or on sufficient cause being shown by any person, shall add to said roll the names of persons, the value of personal property, and the description and value of real property liable to assessment in said township omitted from such assessment roll; they shall correct all errors in the names of persons in the descriptions of property upon such roll, and in the assessment and valuation of property thereon, and they shall cause to be done whatever else may be necessary to make said roll comply with the provisions of this act.

Kellogg's Columbian Oil cures Rheumatism and Kidney Complaints when other remedies fail, by creating a healthy action, thereby effecting a permanent cure.

THE AMATEUR TELEGRAPH LINE.

We mentioned the fact last week that Mr. Wesley Keyser was talking up a project to extend the farmers' telegraph line into the village. We have obtained a few figures upon the cost of making the extension which show that it can be done at a very moderate expense. The cost for wire and poles and putting the same up from Mr. Maugas' place into the village will be about $100. Twenty persons could take stock of $5.00 each and pay this expense. We understand that the owners of the present line are willing to incorporate their share without asking any bonus.—These twenty shareholders can then buy a good office outfit, including the necessary instruments and a small fee to Mr. Bowen for instruction, for about $15,00 each; making the total cost not more than twenty dollars.—Each shareholder will then have an instrument in his own office or dwelling and the benefit of a three months' course of instruction for the small sum of $20,00. A three months' course in telegraphy at the Toledo Institute costs $45,00. Board for 16 weeks is at least $3 per week more, making $48. A young man by the strictest economy could not go through that course at an expense of less than $100. By the plan proposed he can get a good course for $20, and besides he will own an interest in a permanent telegraph line, which will enable him to keep up his practice hereafter. The instruments used will be of the best make sold by the Western Electric Manufacturing Company, and a good article of telegraph wire will be used. Poles which will answer the purpose can be procured in the vicinity.—Any one wishing to take stock in this enterprise can hand his name to Wesley Keyser.

The third annual report of the Secretary of State, relating to farms and farm products, is at hand. It contains a large amount of valuable statistics and comparative tables. In the yield of wheat per acre for 1880, Lenawee makes the best showing of any county in the state except one. Her yield is 21.03, while Washtenaw's average is 23.61 bushels per acre. Some counties were as low as 8 bushels, and the general average is 15 to 18 bushels.

THAT RICH EXPERIENCE.

A Free Press Interview Sustained and its Source Revealed.

(Detroit Free Press.)

A few months ago an interview with a prominent and well known physician, formerly a resident of Detroit, but now living in Newark, appeared in the columns of this paper. The statements made by the doctor and the facts he divulged were of so unusual a nature as to cause no little comment among those who read them, and many inquiries were raised as to the veracity of the statements it contained. The name of the physician was at that time suppressed at his own request. The seal of secrecy, however, can now be removed, as the important and interesting letter which appears below will abundantly show. In order, however, that the reader may better understand this letter, a few extracts are herewith given from the interview in question.

After an exchange of courtesies and a few reminiscences about the war, in which the doctor was a prominent surgeon, the reporter remarked upon the doctor's improved appearance, upon which he said:

"Yes, I have improved in health since you last saw me, and I hope also in many other ways. One thing, however, I have succeeded in doing, and it is one of the hardest things for anyone, and especially a doctor to do, and that is I have overcome my prejudices. You know there are some people who prefer to remain in the wrong rather than acknowledge the manifest right. Such prejudice leads to bigotry of the worst order. Now, I am a physician, and of the 'old school' order too; but I have, after years of experience and observation, come to the conclusion that truth is the highest of all things, and that if prejudice or bigotry stand in the way of truth, so much the worse for them, they are certain to be crushed sooner or later. Why, when I knew you in Detroit, I would no sooner have thought of violating the code of ethics laid down by the profession, or of prescribing anything out of the regular order, than I would of amputating my hand. Now, however, I prescribe and advise those things which I believe to be adapted to cure, and which my experience has proven to be such."

"How did you come to get such heretical ideas as these, doctor?"

"Oh, they are the result of my experience and observation. I obtained my first ideas upon the subject, though, from having been cured after all my care and the skill of my professional brethren had failed to relieve me. Why, I was as badly off as many of my patients, with a complication of troubles, including dyspepsia, and consequently imperfect kidneys and liver, and I feared I should have to give up my practice. For months I suffered untold agonies. Dull, indefinite pains in various parts of the body; a lack of interest in everything around me; a loss of appetite; headaches; all these disagreeable symptoms were added to pains which were both acute and constant. Sick as I was, however, I became restored to health in a most surprising manner and in an incredibly short space of time, and it was this that proved a revelation to me. This was the starting point, and my prejudices faded rapidly after that I can assure you. I went to reading extensively, and analyzing more extensively, and since that time I have discovered many things of real value to humanity. Why only a few days ago I advised a lady who was suffering from a serious female difficulty and displacement, to use the same remedy which cured me. I saw her this morning and she is nearly well; the pain and inflamation are all gone and she is around as usual. We have no right in the medical fraternity to sit back and declare there is no such thing as improvement or advancement, or that we have a monopoly of the remedies which nature has given to mankind. There are great changes going on in every department of life, and there are great developments in medicine as well. Thousands of people die every year from supposed typhoid fever, rheumatism or other complaints, when in reality it is from trichina, caused by eating poorly cooked or diseased pork. Thousands of children are dying every year from dropsy as the apparant sequel to scarlatina, when in reality it is from diseased kidneys which have become weakened by the fever they have just had."

"Well, doctor, you have got some new truths here certainly, but they sound very reasonable to me."

"Well, whether they are reasonable or not, I have demonstrated to my own satisfaction that they are true, and I propose to stand by them, no matter how much opposition I may raise by doing so. Any man, be he politician, preacher or physician, who is so considerate of his pocketbook or of his own personal ends as to stultify himself by suppressing the manifest truth, is unworthy the name of man, and unworthy the confidence of the public whom he serves."

The above are some of the principal points in the interview referred to. Now for the sequel. The following outspoken letter from the doctor himself which was just received is published in full:

Editor Detroit Free Press:

Some time ago a reporter of your paper had an interview with me which he said he would like to publish. I consented on condition that you would not mention my name until I gave you permission. I have now accomplished the purpose I had in mind, and wish to say to you (which you can publish or not as you see fit) that I had debated for a long time whether I would shake off some of the professional fetters which bound me with others for years, and tell the truth, or not. When I looked back, and thought of the tortures, like those described by Dante in his trip to the infernal regions, which I endured from dyspepsia, and recalled how much I would have given at that time for the relief which I have since obtained, I determined that I would take the step so long meditated, and thereby discharge a duty to my fellow men. If I could thereby save one poor mortal one night of the terrible suffering I endured, I would be fully satisfied, be the other consequences what they might.

My dyspeptic condition was produced by a torpid liver, which did not, as a consequence, remove the bile from the blood. This produced derangement of the stomach, inflamation of its coats, dyspepsia, constipation, headache, depression of spirits, yellow complexion, fat-covered eyes, chills and fever; in short, I was miserable to the last degree. I appealed in vain to my books, to my skill and to my fellow physicians. The mystery of my ill health grew deeper. I traveled everywhere—exhausted all authorized expedients—but to no purpose.

When in this frame of mind, desperately in need of help, but expecting none, one of my unprofessional friends called my attention to some unusual cures wrought by a prominent remedy and urged me to try it. I emphatically declined. But secretly, and with firm determination that I would never let anybody know what I had done, I began its use. It was only an experiment you know, but for that matter, all medical treatment is experimental. Well, to make a long, and surprising story short, I experienced a sort of physical revolution. My skin got a better color. My liver resumed its functions. I no longer had to arouse the bowels with cathartics. My headaches disappeared with my dyspepsia; but still I was not convinced. "Nature did it," I reasoned. But determined to push the investigation to the extreme, while I was in active work, I tried the effect of the remedy on my patients afflicted with kidney, liver and urinary diseases, watching every development carefully and studiously. Then I was completely disarmed, for the remedy stood every test imposed!

Under such convincing circumstances, the matter of confessing my cure became a question of conscience and of duty to humanity. "Here is a remedy," I said, "that has done for me what the best medical skill of the country could not accomplish"—and as an honorable man I will not suppress the facts. I therefore write you and most unhesitatingly assert that for all diseases of the kidneys, liver, stomach or urinary organs which are amenable to treatment, Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure surpasses any remedy I have ever known or used, and since physicians have so much ill-success in the treatment of diseases of these organs, I am prepared to accept all the consequences when I say that they are if conscientious in duty bound to use this pure vegetable compound in their practice. Yours very truly, J. W. Smith, M. D.

Statements so outspoken as the above and coming from such a reliable source are valuable beyond question. They conclusively show not only the power of the remedy which has become so well known and popular, but the great importance of attention in time to the first indications of declining health. When professional men of such high standing sink their prejudice and willingly declare their belief in that which they know to be valuable, the public may confidently follow their example.

Mr. Robert McNealy, Hagerstown, Md., writes: "I was reduced to a living skeleton by distressful ailments that completely exhausted me of all vitality. All the organs of my body—lungs, liver, kidneys, heart, sight, hearing, brain, nerves, etc.,—were in disorder, and each gave me trouble in a greater or less degree. I doctored for kidney complaint and dyspepsia; I took consumption cures; I did everything in my vain efforts to find relief. Mr. Wells, in Morris' drug store, told me to try Brown's Iron Bitters. Two bottles have made me feel like a new person, and I believe I am permanently cured of all my distress. I weigh twenty-four pounds more now than I did a month ago.

Betty and the Baby.

The people are reading with much interest the varying opinions concerning Sergeant Mason and his sentence of imprisonment. A Philadelphia correspondent visited the Sergeant's wife, "Betty," and her baby, and found them in need of money. When this fact was known hundreds of contributions were showered upon the family, and the people seemed to be interested in their welfare. S. Brainard's Sons, Cleveland, have just issued a pretty song, entitled "Betty and the Baby." It is having a large sale. The melody and words are good—in fact it is worthy of a place in your musical portfolio. Send for it. Price 35 cts.

HARVESTING MACHINES

Take the Lead.

In 1853, 500 Machines were sold.
In 1881, 40,413 were sold, and
47,000 have been ordered for 1882.

But the NE PLUS ULTRA of Harvesting Machinery is the Wood Twine Binder. This machine was first put upon the market in 1880, and 4,184 machines were sold that year. In 1881, the sales swelled to 10,034, and orders for over 12,000 have already been received for 1882.

THE WOOD TWINE BINDER!

Possesses these special points of excellence:

1—It is the most perfect automatic self binder ever made.
2—It effects a positive separation of the bound from the unbound grain.
3—The sheaf is formed and compressed without any strain on the twine until the knot is tied.
4—The grain is straightened by the action of the packer as it enters the binder.
5—The automatic uniform sizing of the bundle, thus relieving the driver of the care of stopping and starting the binder.

Last year's machines proved such a perfect success that they will be built substantially the same for 1882, with such improvements in minor details as may be found necessary.

Every farmer desiring to buy a self binder should examine the Wood Twine Binder before purchasing.

WE stated last week that the National ticket carried Raisin. This statement was a little "out of level." The National ticket was partially successful and secured the supervisor, but a portion of the candidates on the Republican ticket were chosen. The result was similar to that in most other towns in the county, rather mixed.

JOHN O'NEIL brought in a hen's egg yesterday which he got at Aaron Norcross', in Franklin, which measured 9½ inches in circumference. THURSDAY, March 30th, occurred the marriage of Miss Lola S. Walker and Dr. Peter Hyndman. Many Tecumseh people were acquainted with Miss Walker and wish her all joy and happiness. A SERIOUS SCARE.

A Girl Quite Seriously but not Fatally Shot.

Last Sunday afternoon, between five and six o'clock, a shocking affair occurred at the house of Frank S. Wilson, a mason, who lives on Cummins st., the particulars of which are as follows:

The Tuesday previous, Mr. Wilson had been using his revolver shooting at a mark and had left it in a commode draw uncleaned. Sunday afternoon Maggie Craig, a cousin of Wilson's wife, James E. Lowry, and Mr. and Mrs. Wilson were sitting in the house and Wilson was cleaning the revolver. The barrels were empty and the ladies had been pointing it at each other and causing considerable merriment. Mrs. Wilson stepped from the room and as she came back, wishing to practice a joke on the party, took the revolver from the draw where Wilson had just placed it, and supposing it was unloaded, as before, pointed it at Miss Craig. It accidentally exploded, the ball taking effect just above the collar bone, close to the neck in Miss Craig's right shoulder, and was taken out just below the shoulder blade. Dr. Catlin was instantly called and extracted the ball. Mrs. Wilson was as badly frightened as Miss Craig, as all supposed, until the doctor arrived, that the wound was fatal. Although the affair was entirely unintentional, and unlooked for on the part of anyone present, it created quite an excitement in our usually quiet community.

The consequence was the buggy was tipped over and Mrs. Whittlesey was thrown out upon the sidewalk. She escaped without serious injury, however. The horse freed himself from the buggy and ran down the street a few rods when he was caught. The result of the mishap may be summed up as a bad fright for the ladies, a few moments' excitement on the streets and a badly broken buggy.

SUNSHINE seems almost indispensable to the full enjoyment of Easter day. The rainy, dismal weather last Sabbath cast a gloom over the morning services in the churches, but the prearranged programs were nevertheless carried out. Services appropriate to the day were held in the different churches, and at most of them the Sunday Schools gave an Easter concert in the evening.

BISHOP HARRIS, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, visited St. Peters' church in this village last Monday night, and administered the Rite of Confirmation to ten persons. The Rector and the Rev. Mr. Frey, of Clinton, were in the chancel and assisted in the services. A large congregation was present and a good delegation from Clinton. An unusual interest was manifested, the visitation coming immediately after the Easter services, which were of more interest than usual. The early service on Easter day, according to the custom of the parish, was at 6 o'clock, and the edifice was crowded with an earnest congregation of worshippers. The second service was at half past ten, and a Sunday School service at 3½ P. M., with Easter presents to the children. The floral decorations were unusually abundant and tasteful, for which they were indebted to Mrs. D. Spaulding, having had an unlimited supply of beautiful plants from her green house. The music under the leadership of Dr. C. M. Woodward was admired by all, and declared to be superior to anything of the kind in this parish.

Two Wives at the Same Time.

Chas. F. Wilcox was arrested at Muskegon last Tuesday by Deputy Sheriff Stevens, and brought to Adrian, charged with having two wives, both of whom are now in the flesh.—In May, 1881, Wilcox, who worked at Bills & Waring's saw mill in Raisin, was married to Miss Ella Wheeler, of Blissfield. Immediately after their marriage they went to her parents in Blissfield, where the wife has since resided. Wilcox has remained in this vicinity at work, and visited his wife at frequent intervals during the past year. During the past two months, however, he has been neglecting his spouse and so she came to Tecumseh to investigate the matter. The same train which brought her here took Wilcox away with another woman, he having just been married to Miss Amelia Wood. Deputy Sheriff Stevens started in pursuit and overhauled the disciple of Brigham Young at Muskegon, and he is now safely domiciled in the county jail. The young man claims that the former marriage was a sham wedding. He seems to be in a tight place however, whichever horn of the dilemma he may choose to take.

THE FACTS IN THE CASE.

The McCormick Twine Binder Ahead—The Binder Patents Controlled by this Firm.

The controversy between the Harvester companies in regard to the patents covering the twine binders now in use, is waxing warm. From the Saint Paul Pioneer Press of March 24th, we clip the following, which gives the exact facts in the case.

The claim set forth by Cyrus H. McCormick of Chicago, Helen M. Gorham and Norman C. Thomson of Rockford, Ill., who own the patents that were granted to Marquis L. Gorham of Rockford, Ill., is that their right in said patent gives them "ownership and control of all patents relating to the automatic (twine) binding of bundles of grain." Suit was announced against the Minneapolis Harvester Works in the United States district court yesterday afternoon, returnable in June. The claims are based on the following facts as set forth by the gentlemen before referred to. During the years of 1873, 1874, 1875 and 1876 Mr. Marquis L. Gorham of Rockford, Illinois, (a mechanic in humble circumstances) busied himself in making and finally perfecting an automatic twine binder attachment to harvesting machines. In the year 1876 this machine had been perfected and the necessary papers were taken out at the patent office preparatory to securing the patent.

ANOTHER FELLOW AT IT.

While Mr. Gorham was thus engaged during the years indicated, or rather during the last three, Mr. J. F. Appleby was likewise engaged in making a twine binder, and succeeded in 1878 in securing a patent, which he at once speculated upon and introduced to the notice of the manufacturers of harvesters. Among the companies that purchased the right to use his attachment were the Champion Reaper company, of Springfield, O.; the Esterly Harvester company of Chicago, and the Minneapolis Harvester company of Minneapolis, Minn.

In the year 1876, Mr. Gorham, the, it is claimed, inventor of the twine binder died, but the claims of his widow, Mrs. Helen M. Gorham, were vigorously pushed, in conjunction with those of Mr. Norman C. Thomson of Rockford, Ill., who had supplied the funds wherewith to secure the patent and in 1880 the patent office granted the Gorham patent and the decision in its favor set aside, according to the authority of the then interested parties, the Appleby patents,

MAKING THEM NULL AND VOID.

The controversy was long, bitter and expensive in character. At some time, either during the progress of the controversy or subsequent to the granting of the patent to Gorham, Mr. Cyrus H. McCormick of Chicago, secured an interest in it and as soon as possible placed the Gorham twine binder on the McCormick harvesters. According to the official records the grant of a patent to Gorham for an "automatic twine binder for binding grain" subordinated all other patents of that description; hence the parties who bring the suits feel confident of being able to impose the royalty they demand, and to secure an injunction against the harvester companies which are using the Appleby binder.

Colfax's Lecture.

Hon. Schuyler Colfax will deliver his lecture upon "Garfield—Our Martyred President" at the Opera House next Tuesday evening, April 18th.—Admission 25 and 35 cents. Reserved seats at Adamson's without extra charge. The South Bend Tribune says:

Mr. Colfax's successful career as a lecturer is one of the most remarkable of our times. Six years continuance in it does not exhaust the demand for lectures from him. In spite of his having lectured at so many hundreds of places in thirty states and territories his seasons continue as full of engagements as ever. Two years ago he rewrote his Lincoln lecture, condensing into it numerous historic facts, many of them not known to the public at large, with glimpses of Seward, Stanton, Chase, Holt, Thad Stevens and others of the famous group of public men who were so near the great Emancipator, and of whom Mr. Colfax himself is now one of the few survivors. The sad coincidence of the cowardly assassination of two of our worthiest and noblest presidents having linked their names together inseparably, he has, yielding to many requests, again rewritten and rearranged his lecture on our first murdered president, adding to it as a fitting prelude, a tribute to our last murdered president, who in his heroic career from the log cabin to the white house, and his ennobling characteristics, so strikenly resembles his predecessor.—In its condensed shape, not a quarter of the original lecture remains, and it is, therefore substantially a new lecture on "Our Martyred Presidents—Lincoln and Garfield." The invitations for it, we learn, are now coming to Mr. Colfax from every direction, over 100 since the 1st of this month.—His coming lecture season bids fair, therefore, to be one of his busiest.

TWINE BINDERS.

We notice a conundrum (?) was published in a late issue of your paper, entitled, "Who is ahead now" and, in order to place this matter squarely before the public, and that all may understand our position, relative to the Binder trade, we publish the following circular from Mr. William Deering. We commend it to the careful scrutiny of all, especially that part relating to our competitors, being defendants in three suits now in the courts, and also, the guarantee of protection from Mr. Deering.

KENNEDY & CO.

OFFICE OF WILLIAM DEERING,
Chicago, April 10, 1882.

To our Agents and Customers:

The owners of certain patents, known as the "M. L. GORHAM" have brought suit against me, alleging infringement in my DEERING TWINE BINDER.

I wish to state that the Gorham patents have for a long time been offered me at a moderate royalty, and were carefully investigated by my attorneys, who decided that I in no way infringed them. If the owners think otherwise, it is quite legitimate and right they should submit the same to the decision of the proper tribunal. I will cheerfully join issue and abide the result. A decision in the Circuit Court can scarcely be expected in less than three to five years, and a final one in the Supreme Court in any less time.

The courts are open to any one wishing to litigate his patents, and the owners of these patents were [illegible] their action against either the manufacturer and vendor, or any seller or user; but having properly elected to proceed against me, they are debarred from action against any of the others concerned.

I should not consider this suit of sufficient importance to mention to you, only that it has been made the occasion by a well-known concern for a BUNCOMBE ADVERTISING DODGE.

This concern is understood to have become the owner of a one third part of these patents by exchange of other patents of little value, and is now flooding the newspapers of the country with notices of the suit, accompanied with comments intended to make the impression that it controls the TWINE BINDER patents, and that it will be hazardous for farmers to buy other than their own machine. Any machine that requires this class of advertising must be in sad need of substantial merits to commend it.

This concern fails to assert in these paid advertisements for the benefit of purchasers of farm machinery, that they are now in the courts as defendants in suits for infringements of the MARSH HARVESTER patent, for infringements of the Gordon patents on Binders, and for infringement of the Graham patents on Mowers. Why do they not advertise the fact that all, or nearly all, the machines they have put out of late are subject to patent litigation? And with the formula usually appended to the notices of the Binder suit, "It would be well for farmers to be cautious" in buying McCormick's machines, etc.

Farmers are not supposed to be much versed in patents, or to consult an attorney every time they have occasion to purchase a piece of farm machinery, and any concern who should propose to trouble an innocent purchaser with questions of this kind, is and deserves to be considered unworthy of the confidence or patronage of the farming community, and is, and should be odious, especially when redress can be had of the responsible party who makes and puts the same upon the market. Such advertising can, and should only result in injury to the party authorizing it, and no reputable and high-minded party will resort to such methods of intimidation and threats. The "Drive Well" or "Barb Wire" method does not take well with farmers, or generally commend itself to manufacturers of harvesting machinery.

Finally, I wish to say, I was first to put a successful Twine Binder in the harvest-field. I have made and am making the best and most successful Twine Binder. I have sold more and am now making (as I believe) more Twine Binders than any other concern in the United States. I shall continue to make and sell the best binder. I am able and disposed, and will warrant, defend and protect against all adverse claimants and comers, all past, present and future purchasers of the Deering Twine Binder.

If the courts in this case, or any other, find me guilty of infringement, I will abide their decision and respond to their mandates.

The Science of Kissing.

Science in the last few years has gained a terrible foothold in this world. It has rattled the dry bones of old fogyism, made pi out of worn-out theories, upset ideas which have been established for centuries. The latest and most astonishing fact that has been developed is that there is a scientific mode of kissing. The day when a young man could crush a girl against the neck and gobble a kiss in a rough but comfortable manner is past. The time when he could encircle her waist with one arm, get his shirt-bosom full of hair-oil, and pomegrette his lips over every square inch of her countenance is no more. Science has proclaimed against it, and man shudders, but remains silent. The old style of kissing, which sounds like some one tearing a clapboard off a smoke-house, is now considered bad taste, and, consequently, is rapidly going out of fashion although the majority of girls admit that science has cruelly destroyed all the comfort of a long-lingering, heart-thrilling kiss, and causes them to express no little regret at the change. The improved scientific method of kissing is to throw the right arm languidly around the fair one's shoulder, tilt her chin up with the left hand until her nose is pointed at an angle of forty-five degrees, or rather, until it has an aspect resembling the bowsprit of a clipper-built sloop, then stoop slowly, and, grazing about her lips in a quiet, subdued sort of a way, tickle her nose with your moustache until she cries, "Ouch!" This is scientific kissing, but there is no consolation in it. It is flat, lukewarm; it lacks substance, and if not stale, is at least unprofitable.

Whipping Children.

A parent who don't know how to govern a child without whipping it ought to surrender the care of that child to some wiser person. Sportsmen once thought it was necessary to lash their dogs in training them for the field. They know now that the whip should never be used. Horsemen once thought that it was necessary to whip colts to teach them to start on the spot at the word, and pull steadily. They know now that an apple is better than the lash, and a caress better than a blow. If dogs and horses can be thus educated without punishment, what is there in our children which makes it necessary to slap and pound them? Have they less intelligence? Have they colder hearts? Are they lower in the scale of being?

We have heard many old people say: "If we were to bring up another child we should never whip it." They are wise, but a little too late. Instead of God doing so little for children that they must be whipped to goodness, He has done so much for them that even a whipping can't ruin them—that is, as a rule. But, alas, there are many exceptions to this rule. Many children are of such quality that a blow makes them cowardly, or reckless, or deceitful, or permanently ugly. Whipping makes children lie. Whipping makes them hate their parents. Whipping makes home distasteful—makes the boys run away, makes the girls seek happiness anywhere and anyhow. Whipping is barbarous. Don't whip.

Later Effect of Sunstroke.

Many persons are killed every year by improper exposure to the heat of the sun. We are all familiar with this sad fact. But is not so well known that those who apparently fully recover from a sunstroke are liable to future ailments as a consequence of the attack.

The inflammation of the nerve-centers, caused by the heat, generally results in permanent changes of their structure or of their substance. Hence, however well the person may be, even for years, these tissue changes may, at a later period, give rise to impaired health and even to death.

But what is still worse, is that the most frequent consequence is insanity; and insanity, too, of the more violent type, occasioned by an acute inflammation of the membranes of the brain. The inflammation directly affects the gray matter of the cerebral convolutions, on which intelligence depends. This is a calamity worse than to have been stricken dead at once.

We would not unnecessarily alarm any person who has suffered from coup de soleil. But we would impress on such persons the need of taking great care of their health; the necessity of avoiding whatever owers its tone; especially all excess and passion, and whatever tends to disturb the cerebral functions.

We would also let the facts emphasize the need of guarding against an exposure to attack. Parents should teach their children the dangers of undue exposure to the sun's heat. We would also remind those who indulge in alcoholic drinks that they are specially liable to sunstroke; and that persons who use such drinks seldom recover when they have been attacked by this serious disorder.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

Since the introduction of Kellogg's Columbian Oil it has made more permanent cures and given better satisfaction on Kidney Complaints and Rheumatism than any known remedy. Its continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it known as a safe and reliable agent to employ against all aches and pains, which are the forerunners of more serious disorders. It acts speedily and surely, always relieving suffering and often saving life. The protection it affords by its timely use on rheumatism, Kidney affection, and all aches and pains, wounds, cramping pains, cholera morbus, diarrhoea, coughs, colds, catarrh, and disorders among children, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. It is absolutely certain in its remedial effects, and will always cure when cures are possible. Call at C. A. Wright & Co.'s and get a memorandum book giving more all details of the curative properties of this wonderful medicine.

The Trouble all Over.

"A patient in Middletown" writes to Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y.: "I wrote you about five weeks ago for advice in taking your medicine, as at that time two Stones had just passed from my Kidneys, the effect of using 'Kennedy's Favorite Remedy.' I have taken the 'Favorite Remedy' ever since, and have no more trouble from that source. It is also toning my entire system.

How to Cultivate Peanuts.

A correspondent of Colman's Rural gives the following regarding the raising of peanuts:

"Any dry soil will answer. Let the ground be well pulverized, leaving an even surface. Get fresh nuts; break them out of the shell and plant, about the time of planting beans, two inches deep, in hills three feet apart, and the rows five feet apart. In order to have straight rows, use a line. Plant two kernels in a hill, but if both come up, transplant one of them without disturbing the other. As soon as the plants are up, hoe and keep them clean. When they begin to run and show blossoms, cover the vines, blossoms and all with about an inch of earth, taken from between the rows. With good cultivation the vines grow fast, and must be covered, always leaving the tip of the runner just peeping out of the ground. As soon as the leaves are touched with frost, dig the nuts, leaving them clinging to the vines. Now the nuts must be well dried. This can be done by hanging up the vines, or stripping them off and spreading them on a floor or, any way so they will not mould. Keep them from rats or mice. In yield I have had an average of over a quart to each plant. There are two varieties, one called red and the other white. I cultivate the white, which stands first in market."

A New Wrinkle

There is no such thing as wiping out wrinkles. In men they are often honorable evidence of hard mental labor; in women they are usually evidence of coming age, although care and suffering have much to do with them.

Sometimes fair foreheads are prematurely wrinkled from a nervous habit of elevating [illegible] and too constant pressure of the pillow on one or both sides of the head while sleeping. And just here comes a fact worth remembering. If the forehead has escaped wrinkles, crow's feet are prematurely seen about the corners of the eyes. We all see the crow's feet in men and women whose brows are smooth and young-looking. They are the result of sleeping on the right and left sides. The pressure upon the temple and cheek leaves wrinkles at the corners and underneath the eyes which disappear in a few hours, but finally become so fixed that neither hours nor ablutions will abate them. If girl children were compelled to sleep on their backs and continue the habit when they reach womanhood and afterward, they would arrive at middle life without crow's feet gathering in the neighborhood of the eyes and in most cases their foreheads would be free from even shallow furrows.

Meal for Hogs.

Our experience, says the American Cultivator, is that meal should be fed to pigs in limited quantities as soon as they are taken from the sow. If you have plenty of milk, feed that, although you will find great assistance from the use of a little meal. In providing for your pigs, if you find that you have milk for but four pigs, divide it among six, adding meal to compensate for the division. As the pigs grow, add shorts and other muscle and bone-making material, as these animals need to be lengthened and grown before too much attention is paid to fattening. Scalding shorts improves their feeding value for pigs. As the pigs continue to grow, increase the ration of meal, and in nine months from weaning you will find on the above basis that you have six fat pigs if of the small boned breeds, while if of the larger breeds you will find increase in weight sufficient to pay for the extra cost of feeding the meal. An idea is prevalent that feeding meal will check the growth of pigs, which is true if nothing else is fed, since Indian corn is somewhat deficient in the materials which go to form the bone and muscle, yet we have found that meal, in combination with other food, is an advantage at any age of the pig. However anxious you may be to hasten the fattening of a pig, clear meal is not the most economical if fed alone. A few shorts and a proportion of cob meal is profitable in the feeding mixture.

An Educational Test.

Congressman Horr, of Michigan, in a speech said: "There is no better evidence of a country's intelligence than the letters its people write. I don't care what kind of a letter they write, so they write letters. The number of letters the people write is a perfect index to their intelligence. The people of the Southern states for the past ten years haven't written letters enough to pay their own postage by $25,000,000 whereas Michigan with her undeveloped country to-day writes letters enough to pay her own postage bill. Have you ever examined this educational business? I had occasion to look it up. The great state of New York every year pays more money to educate her common people than the entire 16 Southern states. The little state of Vermont pays more than the states of Mississippi, Alabama, and Arkansas. Why, the state of Michigan, only admitted to the Union in 1837, not a quarter of her acreage under cultivation, and yet we have got $3,000,000 more in school-houses than the entire eleven states that went out of the Union."

A Delightful Novelty.

Death to rats, mice, roaches and ants; Parsons' Exterminator. Barns, granaries and households cleared in a single night. No fear of bad smells. Best and cheapest vermin killer in the world. Sold everywhere.

A Valuable Addition.

Because it is beneficial to the scalp and adds to personal beauty by restoring color and lustre to gray and faded hair, is why Parker's Hair Balsam is such a popular dressing.

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

ALL SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, PILES, INFLAMMATION of LUNGS and BOWELS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, CHILBLAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, ERYSIPELAS, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all disorders attendant with INFLAMMATION.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Adulteration of Sugar.

The attention of Dr. C. F. Chandler, Professor of chemistry in Columbia College and President of the Board of Health of New York, having been called to the adulteration of sugar, etc., said in reply:

"I don't bother myself about such frauds any more. Life is too short. For a good many years I used to take great pleasure in battling against fraud and humbug, and would still if any good could be accomplished. After all, people seem to prefer, for example, how they are continually running after quack medicines, throwing away money and their health at the same time. So when it is offered to them it is no use for a few to spend their lives in pointing out the good and pure as distinguished from the bad and the adulterated. Besides, this does not come into my province as a health officer. If it did I would certainly concern myself about it. These cheap sugars that are mixed with the more costly article are perfectly good and wholesome, so that the mixing of them is simply a fraud, with which the Board of Health has nothing to do. Fighting against fraud in this country is more than a Herculean task. I came to the conclusion long ago that the only way was to leave it alone and let the people suffer the consequences. When they come to their senses and are willing to co-operate in a crusade against fraud, instead of patronizing and encouraging it, then it will be time for us to take up the cudgel again. I have known all about this practice of adulterating sugars and sirups for a long time."

Beware of Them.

A good article that has achieved success, and attained a world-wide reputation by its true merits and wonderful results, is always imitated. Such is the case with Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. Already unprincipled parties are endeavoring to delude an unsuspecting public by offering imitations of this most fortunate discovery. Do not be deceived, but insist on having the true remedy, and take no other. For sale by all reliable druggists everywhere.

THE SURGEON'S KNIFE.

Mr. Simeon Tietsell, of Saugerties, N. Y., had been treated for seven years by various physicians for what they call Stricture of the Urethra, without benefit. He finally consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Roundout, N. Y., who found his trouble to be Urinary Deposit or Stones in the Bladder. The doctor at once resorted to the knife, with the knife and then gave his great Blood Purifier, "Favorite Remedy," to persist their extrusion. The entire treatment was eminently successful, and Mr. Tietsell's recovery was rapid and perfect.

While "Favorite Remedy" is a specific in all Kidney and Bladder diseases, it is equally valuable in cases of Bilious Disorders, Constipation, of the Bowels, and all the ills apparently inseparable from the constitution of women. Try it. Your druggist has it, and its cost is only one dollar a bottle. The lucky man is he who gets this advice in practice. Don't forget the name and address, Dr. David Kennedy, Roundout, N. Y. The Doctor would have it understood, that while he is engaged in the introduction of his medicine, "Favorite Remedy," he still continues the practice of his profession, but confines himself exclusively to office practice. He treats all diseases of a chronic character, and performs all the minor and capital operations of surgery.

Also one other piece or parcel of land situate in the village of Hudson county of Lenawee, and state of Michigan, described as situated on section nineteen in said township, commencing on the north line of land deeded by Ann B. CONGRESSIONAL.

SENATE.

APRIL 3.—The senate passed a resolution appropriating $10,000 for a monument over the grave of Thomas Jefferson at Monticello, Va. A bill was introduced for a bridge across the Missouri river near Harrison county, Iowa, and to compel the Kansas Pacific road to pay the cost of surveying its lands. Mr. Voorhees submitted a resolution in council to the Irish prisoners in Ireland. Mr. Hoar reported a bill to secure the safe keeping of money paid into the federal courts. The president transmitted a letter from the secretary of the interior asking provision for the payment of the Utah commissioners and election officers, and recommended that the salaries of the commissioners be fixed at $3,000 per annum. A bill was passed authorizing the redemption of outstanding 3½ per cent. certificates at the price of [illegible].

APRIL 4.—In the senate, yesterday, Mr. Miller reported favorably the bill to incorporate the Maritime Canal company of Nicaragua. Mr. Conger obtained leave to visit his mother in Illinois, who is dangerously ill. On the bill to grant right of way to the St. Louis and San Francisco road, Mr. Ingalls moved to require the consent of the councils of the Choctaws and the Chickasaws. Mr. Teller was courteously given an opportunity to pass the bill admitting free of duty articles for the Colorado exposition.

APRIL 5.—In the senate, Mr. Saunders reported a bill for the admission of Dakota. Mr. Miller introduced a measure to suspend Chinese immigration for ten years. A motion by Mr. Farley to take up the vetoed Chinese bill was adopted by a vote of 29 to 25. After a prolonged debate, Mr. Morgan's motion to refer the bill to the committee on foreign relations was lost. On the question of passing the bill over the veto the vote was 29 ayes to 21 noes, the measure failing for lack of a two-thirds vote. A resolution was adopted asking the number of pensioners on the roll and the amount paid them. Mr. Morgan offered a resolution, which was passed, to place trade with Mexico on a more reciprocal basis. Mr. Cameron, of Pennsylvania, reported a bill appropriating $200,000 for the relief of the officers and crew of the Monitor which participated in the battle with the Merrimac.

APRIL 6.—In the senate, Mr. Cameron presented a memorial from the Good Templars of Wisconsin against using the liquor revenues as an educational fund. A bill was passed appropriating $50,000 for the immediate relief of the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians. Mr. Farley introduced a Chinese bill suspending immigration for sixteen years. Mr. Miller reported a bill for ocean mail service to foreign ports. The bill to regulate the counting of votes for president and vice president was passed. A recommendation from the secretary of war was received for an additional appropriation of $501,331 for army transportation. After an executive session, the senate adjourned to Monday.

HOUSE.

APRIL 3.—In the house, Mr. Singleton presented a petition from five thousand citizens of Illinois for the improvement of the Mississippi levees. Bills were introduced to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi at Memphis, and to apply the surplus revenue to the payment of the public debt. A hot debate took place on a resolution to fix a date for taking up the bill to extend the corporate existence of national banks, which was voted down by 122 to 77. Under suspension of the rules, bills were passed to readjust salaries of postmasters, to extend the bond period for distilled spirits, and to erect public buildings at Louisville, Rochester, Columbus and Minneapolis.

APRIL 4.—In the house, Mr. Chalmers introduced a bill to amend the Apportionment law, providing that in no state shall the difference in the population of congressional districts exceed 20,000. In committee of the whole the army appropriation bill was taken up. Mr. Henderson moved to insert a proviso that no soldier or sailor of thirty-five years he may apply to the president and be placed on the retired list, and if he has served forty years, or is 62 years of age, he shall be retired. An amendment was adopted providing that any superintendent other than a commissioned officer may be honorably discharged from service on receipt of one year's pay and allowances. The committee of the whole rose and a communication was received from the secretary of state with regard to American citizens imprisoned in Ireland.

APRIL 5.—The house went into committee on the whole on the sundry appropriation bill. In lieu of clauses pending in the quartermaster department, Mr. Hawk here stated that he had reason to show that clerks in the quartermaster and commissary departments had exacted blackmail of five per cent. for recommending claims. An amendment was adopted increasing to $50,000 the appropriation for the army medical museum. The committee rose, when an amendment was agreed to, forbidding any expenditure in investigating claims by the quartermaster-general's office. The bill then passed and the house adjourned.

APRIL 6.—In the house Mr. Calkins reported in favor of seating Mr. Lynch from the shoe-string district of Mississippi, in place of Gen. Chalmers. A bill was reported to grant the right of way through the Choctaw nation to the St. Louis and San Francisco road. Mr. Page was then permitted to introduce his Chinese bill, which was referred to the committee on education and labor; as were also similar measures presented by Messrs. Willis and Berry.

APRIL 7.—The house passed a bill to relieve from the charge of desertion volunteer soldiers who served faithfully through their term and failed to be mustered out. The committee on war department expenditures was directed to inquire into alleged abuses in the adjudication of claims in the quartermaster or commissary department. Mr. Washburn submitted a conference report on the bill to bridge the Missouri at St. Charles, which was agreed to. Mr. Haskell made a speech on the tariff-commission bill. An evening session was held to consider pension bills.

APRIL 8.—When the members of the house arrived at the capitol they found the flag at half-mast and were informed of the death of Representative Allen. Mr. Muldrow, after the house was called to order, finished his speech on the Tariff-Commission bill, not more than fifty or sixty members being present. The house then adjourned out of respect to the memory of Mr. Allen.

SEC. 5, Chap. VIII, of the by-laws and ordinances of the village of Tecumseh reads thus: "No person shall encumber the sidewalks of the said village with boxes, barrels or other cumbrous articles, or ride or drive a horse or team upon said sidewalks, under a penalty not exceeding ten dollars and costs." It is the duty of the Council to enforce this ordinance, the same as all others. They have no option in the matter. So long as the ordinance stands it is the duty of the village officials to enforce it.

THE Morenci Normal School has gone where the woodbine twineth. The Observer, which is undoubtedly posted upon the real cause of the collapse, says:

If a stone-slab could be afforded for the "late lamented" Tri-State Normal, a most appropriate inscription therefor would be: "Died for want of management." This is the absolute fact, and any other version is mere blanketism. Mr. Tait's assertion that the town had not done for him as it agreed is an insult to keeping with his other one, attempting to blame others for that which he alone is principally responsible; as in the one case public-spirited citizens had dealt most liberally with him and, using wise discretion, were simply awaiting stronger signs of permanency before further investment, and in the other, private parties, knowing Tait's expressed determination to leave, exercised only ordinary business care, although even then willing to remove all pressure if he would stay, which he would not.

Adrian Times: The newly elected officials of Tecumseh are making rapid strides in the suppression of gambling and illegal salooning, so that it will probably soon be safe for a traveling show to spend the Sabbath there without fear that the cashier of the concern will "buck the tiger" so hard that the actors must walk to the next town.

TO GRATIFY HIS WIFE.

An Interesting Story—A Hopeless Case Cured—A Good Reason for Happiness.

Statement of Mr. Washington Monroe, of Catskill, Greene County, New York.

"For many years I had suffered from a complaint which the physicians called Gravel. I had employed some of the most noted doctors without obtaining any permanent relief, and for a long time my case was regarded as hopeless. All who knew the circumstances said I must die. Finally my wife induced me to try a bottle of Dr. Kennedy's 'Favorite Remedy' which she had somewhere heard of or seen advertised. Without the slightest faith in it, but solely to gratify her, I bought a bottle of a druggist in our village. I used that and two or three bottles more, and—to make a long story short—I am now as healthy a man as there is in the country.

Since then I have recommended Favorite Remedy to others whom I knew to have suffered from Kidney and Liver complaints, and I assure the public that the Favorite Remedy has done its work with a similar completeness in every single instance, and I trust some other sick and discouraged mortal may hear of it and try the Favorite Remedy as I did."

Brooklyn's term of exemption from fires seems to have expired, as another, destroying the meat market of Brown & Co. occurred last week and again gave A. J. Williamson a wrenching stage. There has been some fault finding because the new fire bell was not in order, but it really made no difference, because the editor of the Exponent lost his voice for the occasion.

A few of our citizens are indulging in $6000 worth of mourning for the demise of the Buffalo bank, and many others are gloomy because Rev. Record: The examination of Charles F. Wilcox, of Tecumseh, developed the interesting fact that Wilcox was not married to either of the women who by turns have claimed his name and his bed. The complaint against the festive Charles was failure to support his wife. When the facts in the case were developed, the complaint was changed to one for lewd and lascivious promiscuousness, and the prisoner is at large on bail. Wilcox seems to have been something of a liar among the ewe lambs of the flock.

Boys, save up your pennies. Forepaugh's circus is in the state and may give this vicinity a call.

Why It Is So.

The reason why Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" cures complaints of the Liver, Kidneys, Bowels and Blood, is that it is compounded of the very remedies which Nature herself has provided for this purpose.—Being at first scattered through the woods and fields, Dr. K., has collected them and condensed their virtues in the form which he now confidently offers to the sick and suffering. One Dollar expended for a bottle will convince you and make you grateful that you read this item. The Doctor's office is in Rondout, N. Y. Write him a statement of your case.

AUNT LAURA BIXBY, mother of the late Alonzo F. Bixby, and one of the oldest pioneers of Adrian, died suddenly last week. The funeral obsequies were held at Christ church last Sunday afternoon, and were very largely attended. Mrs. Bixby held a large place in the hearts of the older settlers, having been a remarkably active woman in her younger days. She had been leading a quiet and secluded life of late years, but had kept up her interest in church matters and was a faithful mother in Israel up to the day of her death.

On Kingston Bridge.

BY ELLEN MACKAY HUTCHINSON.

On All Souls' Night the dead walk on Kingston Bridge.—[Old Legend.

On Kingston Bridge the starlight shone
Through hurrying mists with shrouded glow:
The boding night-wind made its moan,
The mighty river crept below;
'Twas All Souls' Night, and to and fro
The quick and dead together walked,
The quick and dead together talked,
On Kingston Bridge.

Two met who had not met for years—
Their hate was once too deep for tears:
One drew his rapier as he came—
Up leapt his anger like a flame;
With clash of mail he faced his foe,
And bade him stand and meet him so.
He felt a grave-yard wind go by—
Cold, cold as was his enemy;
A stony horror held him fast.
The Dead looked with a ghastly stare,
And sighed, "I know thee not," and passed
Like to the mist and left him there
On Kingston Bridge.

'Twas All Souls' Night, and to and fro
The quick and dead together walked,
The quick and dead together talked,
On Kingston Bridge.

Two met who had not met for years;
With grief that was too deep for tears
They parted fast.
He clasped her hand, and in her eyes
He sought Love's rapturous surprise.
"O Sweet!" he cried, "hast thou come back
To say thou lov'st thy lover still?"
Into the starlight pale and cold
She gazed afar—her hand was chill.
"Dost thou remember how we kept
Our ardent vigils?—how we kissed?
Take thou these kisses as of old!"
An icy wind about him swept;
"I know thee not," she sighed, and passed
Into the dim and shrouding mist
On Kingston Bridge.

'Twas All Souls' Night, and to and fro
The quick and dead together walked,
The quick and dead together talked,
On Kingston Bridge.

THE HAUNTED INN.

Many years ago, long before the day of railroads, there stood, in the then wild mountain regions of Western Pennsylvania—a large, rambling, tumble-down building, which was used, at the time of which I speak, as an inn. It had been built many years before by a visionary immigrant from the old world, in imitation of his ancestral home. Why such an out-of-the-way spot had been selected for a home no one ever pretended to guess. But certain it was that the owner had expended all of his available means in its erection, and had toiled and starved, and finally died of a broken heart, his utter want of practical training totally unfitting him for wresting a living from the barren hillsides which he had selected for a home. His wife soon followed him to the grave, and his children scattered, no one knew where. And thus it was that the once pretentious mansion went to decay for want of a tenant, and would have rotted to the ground had not the spirit of improvement and enterprise finally invaded the region in search of the hidden treasures of the earth.

When I visited the spot a small village had sprung up around the old house, and that had been taken possession of, and the few rooms not utterly ruined by decay had been converted into a so-called tavern.

The landlord might have starved, however, if he had depended on native custom, for the old house, during those years of solitude, had gained an unsavory reputation, and in the absence of other tenants many-tongued rumor had peopled it with ghosts.

Its reputation had reached me before I visited the place, but as I had always felt an inexpressible longing to sleep in a haunted room and make the personal acquaintance of some of the dissatisfied denizens of the other shore, I was not sorry to learn that the haunted inn was the only place in the town where I could find a resting-place.

I was somewhat taken aback, however, when the landlord informed me, in tones of broken English and poor whisky, that every bed and every room in the house was full. I could not but admit the eternal fitness of things, inasmuch as he was full, too; but I begged him to set his few remaining wits to work to see if he could not find a peg for me to hang up my tired bones upon. After grave consultation with the landlady, it was concluded that they could make me a shake-down, if I did not mind sharing my room with another gentleman who had already retired.

There was nothing for it but to accept the situation, and I did so in good faith.

By the time the shake-down was completed I had finished my supper and announced my desire to retire immediately. The landlord was by this time too far gone to render any assistance, and as the landlady weighed not less than three hundred pounds, I excused her from attendance, and acted as my own usher. She furnished me with the remains of a tallow dip, and giving me a few general directions concerning the location of the room, bade me good-night.

I fortunately stumbled into the right place, for a hasty glance revealed the shake-down. I had just time, however, to bolt the door when the light went out, and it remained for the moon, which shone brightly into the window, to light me to bed, and to reveal the location of the other bed, on which the stranger slept.

I am not naturally nervous, but I confess that I would much rather have known who my room-mate was and the thought of what he might be kept me awake for some time. To add to my nervousness the wind had risen, and it whistled through the cracks and around the gables of the old mansion with a weird and mournful cadence which was any thing but soothing to my tired and already overwrought nerves.

As I lay there the sounds momentarily increased in hideousness. I thought of all the stories I had heard of the cursed old rookery, and as I did so the sounds became more and more like the shrieks of the damned, or the wail of a lost soul. I finally became so nervous that I resolved to arise and go below.

But now, as I rose in my bed for this purpose, I found myself subjected to a new source of annoyance. The mocking wind, which had appeared to me more than once to syllable human sounds came at length upon my ear, distinctly charged with tones which could not be mistaken. It was the hard, suppressed breathing of a man. I listened still, and it came anew, stronger and more fully upon my ear. It was like the thick respirations of an apoplectic. Whence it proceeded I knew not; but that it was near me I was certain. A suspicion of robbery, possible assassination, flashed upon me, but was instantly discarded as foreign to the people among whom I was traveling.

The moonlight now fell upon the curtained bed opposite to me, and I saw the tattered drapery move, as if the frame upon which it was suspended were agitated. I watched, I confess, with more peculiar feelings of interest. I was not alarmed, but an unaccountable anxiety crept over me. At length the curtain parted, and a naked human leg was protruded through its folds; the foot came with a dumb, dead-like sound to the floor, resting there, it seemed to me, at least half a minute before the body to which it belonged was disclosed to my view. Slowly, then, a pallid and unearthly-looking figure emerged from the couch, and stood with its stark lineament clearly drawn against the dingy curtains behind it. It appeared to be balancing itself for a moment, and then began to move along from the bed. But there was something horribly unnatural in its motions. Its feet came to the floor with a dull, heavy sound, as if there was no vitality in them. Its arms hung apparently paralyzed by its side, and the only nerve set rigidly in the frame appeared about its brow. The eyes were dilated and fixed with the expression of ghastly horror, and the petrified lips moved not, as the hideous moaning, which came from the bottom of the chest, escaped them.

It began to move across the floor in the direction of my bed, its knees at every step being drawn up with a sudden jerk to the body, and its feet coming to the ground as if they were moved by some mechanical impulse, and were wholly wanting in the elasticity of living members.

It approached my bed, and mingled horror and curiosity kept me still. It came and stood beside it, and, childlike, I clung to my couch, moving only to the farther side. Slowly, and with the same unnatural footfalls, it pursued me thither, and again I changed my position. It placed itself then at the foot of my bed, and, moved by its piteous groans, I tried to look calmly at it. I endeavored to rally my thoughts—to reason with myself, and even to speculate upon the nature of the object before me. One idea that went through my brain was too extravagant not to remember. I thought, among other things, that the phantom was a corpse, animated for the moment by some galvanic process, in order to terrify me. Then as I recollected that there was no one in the village to carry such a trick into effect—supposing even the experiment possible—I rejected the supposition. How, too, could those awful moans be produced from an inanimate being? And yet it seemed as if every thing about it was dead, except the mere capability of moving its feet and uttering those unearthly expressions of suffering. The spectre, however, if so it may be called, gave me but little opportunity for reflection. Its ghastly limbs were raised anew with the same automaton movement, and, placing one of its feet upon the bottom of my bed, while its glassy eyes were fixed steadfastly upon me, it began slowly stalking towards my pillow.

I confess that I was now in an agony of terror. I sprang from the couch and fled from the apartment. The keen-sightedness of fear enabled me to discover an open closet upon the other side of the hall. Springing into it, I closed the door quickly after me. It had neither lock nor bolt, but the closet was so narrow that by placing my feet against the opposite wall I could brace back against the door so as to hold it against any human assailant who had only his arms for a lever.

The perspiration of mortal fear started upon my forehead as I heard the supernatural tread of that strange visitant approaching the spot. It seemed an age before its measured steps brought it to the door.

It struck it: the blow was sullen and hollow, as if dealt by the hand of a corpse. It was like the dull sound of its own feet upon the floor.

It struck the door again, and, to my intense relief, the sound was more feeble than before. Surely, I thought, the hand of no living man could produce such a sound.

I know not whether it struck again, for now its thick breathing became so loud that even the moanings, which were mingled with the respiration, became inaudible.

At last they subsided entirely, becoming at first gradually weaker, and then audible only in harsh, sudden sobs, whose duration I could not estimate, from their mingling with the blast which swept the hillsides.

The last sound that I remember of hearing was the most terrible of all—the sound which once heard can never be mistaken for any other—the death-rattle in a human throat. It came with a horrible distinctness; it seemed in my very ear. It appeared to me that the accumulated horrors of the whole night had been concentrated in that sound—that audible connection between life and death.

What might have been heard of that I know not, for insensibility came to my relief.

When I came to, I knew that the morning had come, and, scarcely knowing whether or not it had been a hideous dream, I arose and opened the door.

What words can describe the awful horror of that moment? Before me stood the spectre, with the full light of day revealing its revolting features in all their hideous deformity. The face was swollen and livid, the tongue protruded from the mouth, and its eyes, bursting from their sockets, glared at me and froze the blood in my veins.

All this is impressed upon my mind

The rest of my story is soon told. The ghastly thing upon me.
Once more insensibility came to my relief.
I gave a wild shriek and fell, with the brace.
arms were extended forward, fell upon me and clasped me in a horrible embrace with a terrible distinctness, although household of the inn heard my cry, rushed into the hall, and released me.

It was the dead body of a guest of the inn. He was afflicted with some organic affection of the system, and was subject to grievous fits of nightmare, during which he still preserved sufficient powers of volition to move to the bed of his servant, who, being used to his attacks, would take the necessary means to relieve him. The servant had that night remained out late, and when he returned found his way in the dark to the wrong room, and occupied the bed intended for me, whilst I had stumbled into the room occupied by his master, and got into the servant's bed. The poor man had fallen a victim to his malady and my cowardice.

Wrecked in Port.

BY THE HAWKEYE TRAVELER.

As you go to Boston and Hartford by way of the Boston and Albany Railroad, if you take the morning express there are two parlor cars thereunto attached, with all the appurtenance thereunto appertaining, including a porter with a wisp broom in one hand and a place for a quarter in the other. Now these two parlor cars are twins, differing only, as is the case with twins, in their manners. The last time I went out that way, which was only a few weeks since, one of these cars was Governor Hawley, and the other was "Tother Gov'nor," I don't remember who.

All went well until we reached Springfield. There the usual halt of five or ten minutes was made, the parlor car for Albany was switched off to its proper train, and we went thundering on to Hartford.

Before we were well out of the depot an old gentleman confronted me. Round-faced, well-dressed, quick-spoken, a little crusty, and a general air of authority about him.

"Young man," he said, sharply, "out of that!"

"Out of which?" I said, in innocent surprise.

"Out of that chair!" snapped the old party. "Come, be lively; I want to sit down."

I was puzzled and annoyed, and stammered something about this being a parlor car, and—

"Yes, yes," he said, impatiently, "I know all about that; this is a parlor car, and you've got my seat. Get up and get out of it now without any more words. Get a seat of your own somewhere, and don't go around appropriating chairs that don't belong to you! I'm going for lunch. Get out, young fellow."

I am naturally a very meek man, but I did make one more desperate effort to retain my seat. I said I had occupied that seat—

"Ever since I got out of it at Springfield," snarled the old man. "I rode in that seat all the way from Boston, and the minute I left it you jumped into it. And now you jump out of it, and no more words about it, or I'll make the car full of trouble for you."

It began to dawn upon me then just how matters stood. In fact I knew, but I was nettled. Every body in the car was laughing at me, and I do hate to be laughed at. I determined to wait for my sure revenge. I said, "You'll be sorry if you take this chair."

He snorted fiercely, and I abdicated without another word in favor of the testy old jumper of claims who thus summarily evicted me. I arose, gathered up my hat, overcoat, lap-tablet, newspapers, book, big valise, little valise, and articles, and thus burdened walked meekly to the rear of the car, and sat down on the meanest, poorest, most uncomfortable seat in the train, the upholstered bench under the big mirror. The wood-box in the smoking-car is an easy-chair in comparison with that bench. By-and-by the old chair-grabber called out:

"Young man, where is that little red hand-bag I left here?"

I meekly said "I hadn't never tetched it," and he roared out that it was there when I took his chair. But just then the conductor came along and glanced at his ticket, while the old party explained how I had made way with his little red hand-bag. "That young man back there," he explained, "was in my chair when I returned, and my overshoes and a little red leather hand-bag is—"

The old gentleman's face was a study.

"For Ha-Ha-wha-what!" he shouted. "I know better! Told me at Boston this car went through to Albany."

"Lem' see parlor car ticket," said the conductor, briefly. "Yes, that's all right; you're on wrong car; this ticket for the other car. Your baggage half-way t' Albany by this time. Get off at Hartford."

"Well, when can I get a train back to Springfield?" wailed the jumper of chairs.

"T'-night," said the conductor, and passed on to the next car.

Then I arose. I gathered up in my weak and long-suffering arms my hat, overcoat, lap-tablet, newspapers, book, big valise, little valise, and arctics, and walked back to that chair and stood before the most crestfallen man the immortal gods ever pitied. I didn't say anything; I didn't make a gesture; I just stood up before him, holding my goods, personal effects, and railway chattels in my arms, and looked at him. He arose and vamosed the claim. And as I settled down in my recovered possession I made only one remark. I said to the poor old gentleman:

"I told you you'd be sorry if you took this chair."

And he marched back and took a seat on the upholstered bench, to the merry laughter of the happy passengers. And the last time I looked around, O! crowning woe, the conductor was making him pay a quarter for his seat in the parlor car.

An Astrologist on Horoscopes.

The nativities of the Queen's children all show some individuality and character. The second son, Prince Alfred, as he was formerly distinguished, was born at Windsor, August 6, 1844, at 7:50 a. m., with the eighteenth degree of Virgo ascending. The most notable position at his birth was the close conjunction of the Sun and Mars in the sign Leo. This denotes a great liability to fevers and violent accidents. The Prince of Wales, who with many faults is yet remarkable for his bon homie, and for the strong personal regard in which he is held by his immediate friends and the people in his domestic establishments. The favorite epithet applied to the heir apparent is the word jovial, and the correspondents tell us much of his affable hob-nobbing with actors, literary men and others. The Prince of Wales was born with Jupiter rising—hence jovial is a very correct word. All these words, descriptive briefly, succingly and graphically, of character, are relics of the former general belief in astrology. From this doctrine we have our words saturnine, mercurial, martial, etc. It is curious, indeed, to what extent we may trace in this direction the old doctrine of planetary influence, even in the most of our proverbs and common phrases. "He may thank his stars," "his lucky stars," etc., are examples in every-day use, and Shakspeare is notably fond of such expressions. He speaks of the "star-crossed lovers, Romeo and Juliet; of the happy Christmas time, "when no planet strikes," of "the moon coming nearer the earth than is her wont" and making men mad," and in fifty other places of the belief in occult influence. The same is found in the other old poets.

The unfortunate Princess Alice had an interesting horoscope. She was born as Venus was rising and possessed many amiable and attractive qualities, and was one of the most popular members of the family. The Sun was in conjunction with Mercury and approximately in parallel with Jupiter. Her mental faculties were very bright, and it was said that while yet in her teens she was one of the most highly accomplished young ladies of Great Britain, particularly fond of books and art, and with a mind of wider sphere in many ways than usual. The Sun was the hyleg, or life-giver, at her birth, and was afflicted by the sesquidate aspect of Mars, the same evil planet also afflicting the Moon by square aspect. The Sun was in the sign Taurus, which rules the throat, and the unfortunate lady contracted that terrible malady, diphtheria, and fell a victim to it. She caught the infection by kissing one of her children who was suffering with the disease. This diphtheria is a strictly martial disease and in the horoscopes of those who are stricken with it the planet Mars will invariably be seen to occupy some malignant position at birth, and also to exercise an influence in the directions at the time when the malady appears. At those periods when he is traversing the signs Tarsus and Scorpio thousands of children may be observed to be swept away by it. This was remarkably exhibited the last time Mars made his long stay in Tarsus.—Baltimore News.

Ghosts on the Trail.

Wells, Fargo & Co.'s express car No. 5 is said to be haunted. The messengers on the run betwwen San Francisco and Ogden have been exercised over the fact for some time, and when the car was sent to Sacramento, several weeks ago, to be overhauled and repaired, they all expressed much satisfaction, and were firm in the belief that the car-builder would kill the ghost and return the car to the rail free from all demoralizing influence. In this they were disappointed, for the messenger who left San Francisco one night recently was visited by the unseen power, and put to a deal of trouble. The ghost came in and tumbled the boxes of freight about, tolled bells and made sweet music, and called the messenger by name. On the last trip the car made before it was taken from the track the messsnger heard strange noises on the roof. His thoughts were on his duty, and he came to the conclusion that robbers were waiting an opportunity for entering the car. He opened the door, and took a look at both ends of the car, but found everything quiet. He could see nothing unusual, and returned, closed the door, and was walking back to the mailing table, when down came a box of cooked shrimps and a bandbox.—The freight was pushed about, and finally left in the same place. The mysterious din was indulged in until the train was nearing Terrace Station, in the eastern part of the State, and the messenger had about made up his mind to take to the sagebrush, when all was still again.

On one occasion, when they had a corpse in transit, the head and trunk of a man's body was seen to rise up from the casket; take a good look around the car, calling the messenger by name, and then vanish. The car was in the train several years ago, when an accident occurred just west of Truckee, killing Conductor Marshall and an express messenger, and since that time these mysterious noises have been frequent, much to the discomfiture of the occupants. The express boys say car No. 5 is known to all the company's employes, and they all tell the same story for the truth.—Reno Gazette.

A Wonderful Telephone.

Mexican papers contain an account of an invention by a scientific gentleman of that country of a telephone which easily carries the sound of the voice to the distance of fifteen hundred miles. One paper, in commenting on an invention which may well make North American inventors look to their laurels, says: "Until now no telephonic apparatus has been able, in the regular course of business, to transmit sound more than ninety miles. It is to be desired that the Minister of Public Works will boldly profit by the utilization of so notable and useful an invention."

A Valuable Addition.

Because it is beneficial to the scalp and adds to personal beauty by restoring color and lustre to gray and faded hair, is why Parker's Hair Balsam is such a popular dressing.

THE SURGEON'S KNIFE.

Mr. Simeon Tietsell, of Saugerties, N. Y., had been treated for seven years by various physicians for what they call Stricture of the Urethra, without benefit. He finally consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who found his trouble to be Urinary Calculi or Stones in the Bladder. The doctor at once removed the foreign bodies with the knife and then gave his great Blood Specific "Favorite Remedy" to prevent their reformation. The entire treatment was eminently successful, and Mr. Tietsell's recovery was rapid and perfect. "While Favorite Remedy" is a specific in all Kidney and Bladder diseases, it is equally valuable in cases of Bilious Disorders, Constipation, of the Bowels, and all the class of ills apparently inseparable from the constitutions of women. Try it. Your druggist has it, and its cost is only one dollar a bottle. The lucky man is he who puts this advice in practice. Don't forget the name and address, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. The Doctor would have it understood that, while he is engaged in the introduction of his medicine, "Favorite Remedy," he still continues the practice of his profession, but confines himself exclusively to office practice. He treats all diseases of a chronic character, and performs all the minor and capital operations of surgery.

Gen. Gordon.

Anecdotes of the Georgia Politician and Railroader.

Gen. Gordon is going to Europe before long on important business connected with the development of certain lands, and the building of new railroads in the southwest. With the general's energy, which keeps him always on the go, there is a genial playfulness and boyishness about him that makes his presence congenial to all, both old and young; and probably no agent could be sent abroad more likely to win success. Everybody seems to love him; children hang around him, ladies flatter him, old men seek his company, and audiences are charmed by his eloquence. Gen. Robert E. Lee, yielded to the fascination of his genius and involuntarily rendered it an immortal tribute in an incident that was sublime in its grandeur. It was at Appomattox court-house—Grant had demanded Lee's surrender and Lee had refused; another day had passed; Lee sent word to Gordon to know whether anything more could be done; with a handful of men Gordon confronted an impenetrable barrier of steel; "It's hopeless," was Gordon's reply. When Lee heard Gordon's opinion he dropped his head and said: "Then we have done all that can be done," and consented to surrender. As long as Gordon hoped, Lee held on.

With all the general's gayety and imagination, he is, and always has been sincerely a pious man, and never went into an engagement that he did not ask divine assistance and favor. Once, however, he almost lost his gravity at prayers held on the eve of a battle—the battle of the Wilderness. One of the common soldiers was called on to pray, and men could pray at such times, knowing that within the next hour or two one or more of them must be lying in the dust. On this occasion the soldier began: "Oh, Lord! Thou knowest we are about to engage in a terrible conflict, if you take a proper view of the subject." At this time the [illegible] lost their gravity, and fought [illegible] of the Wilderness with their in[illegible] giggling all the way throug[illegible]

At a later time, when Gordon was about to lead an attack at Petersburg, he and Gen. Heth and some others went into a little school-room on the lines to pray. Sol Heth, the general's brother and adjutant general, who was always on the lookout for a drink, was standing a little ways off, and Henry Peyton, one of Gen. Lee's staff, beckoned him to come to the house and join them. Sol did not understand their object, but totally misconceiving it, held up his canteen, and, shaking it, said: "No, I thank you; I've just got hold of some."—Monroe Advertiser.

Dressing Quickly.

A lady writes from behind the scenes: I was just realizing that they were planning to effect a lightning change of costume when the actress herself bounced in. She was warm from her exertion on the stage, but not a bit flurried. She did not lose a single moment, though she chatted glibly with me all the while. First she picked up the gloves and began to put them on. At the same time the maid unhooked her dress from top to bottom with quick, deft fingers, and stripped off the whole garment in a twinkling. The pretty creature stood before me in her white clothes, laughing at my expression of surprise at the rapid disrobement. She seated herself, and extended her feet for the maid to take off her shoes and stockings. The latter, being stripped down over the feet in a jiffy, did not disclose the naked flesh, but elaborately clocked silk hose, so that the fresh pair were already on. By the time the slippers were on, the actress had got the last button of her glove in its buttonhole.

A minute and a half had elapsed. Both had not only worked with great rapidity, but without any false motions or vexation of any sort. Then the maid took off several puffs and a bow from her mistress's head—her hair in the last act having been simply dressed—and put on the more elaborate blonde wig, fastening it in place with hair pins, and setting a lock here and there into place. Next the actress stood up, and the maid swiftly put her into the dress that had lain on the chair. Every part of it fell admirably into place, the drapery across the front hiding the junction, and plentiful hooks and eyes holding all together. Standing before a full length mirror she finally surveyed herself critically, at just three minutes and a half from the start, and then she was ready to go on the stage.

There is a hint in this for women who are not actresses. We spend a vast amount of time in adjusting the accessories of a toilet, only to take them apart when we doff the dress. Most of them might as well be fastened permanently where they belong.

Plants in the Kitchen.

Plants thrive in the kitchen—provided it is sunny—and add much to its comfortable appearance. Why not cultivate the useful as well as ornamental? Parsley, chives, cress, lettuce, shallots and herbs of various kinds belong to this class. These may be grown singly in flower pots, or a window box to contain the entire collection may be provided. In either case the perennial or biennial species, such as parsley, chives, sage, etc., should be transplanted, but not removed to the kitchen before freezing nights threaten. Seeds of cress, lettuce, radishes, etc., may be sown any time after the boxes are in their permanent quarters. It would be well to store a few pots of parsley in the cellar, as a reserve for replacing those that may lack in vigor or become exhausted. A kitchen window box, with geraniums or petunias in the center, green herbs and pink blooming chives as a middle border, the curly leaves of parsley and cresses hanging over the edges and sides, and English and German ivies twining around the window frame, would form a bright foreground to the snow-covered landscape without. Not only pleasure and enjoyment might thus be added to the precincts of the kitchen, but many an aromatic herb for flavoring, and many crisp, fresh leaves for garnishing a choice dish, might be picked from the kitchen window garden. Think of this, housekeepers, and try the plan for yourselves next winter.

PILES! PILES!! PILES!!!

A Sure Cure Found at Last. No One Need Suffer.

A sure cure for the Blind, Bleeding, Itching and Ulcerated Piles has been discovered by Dr. Williams (an Indian remedy), called Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment. A single box has cured the worst chronic cases of 25 and 30 years standing. No one need suffer five minutes after applying this wonderful soothing medicine. Lotions, Instruments, and Electuaries do more harm than good. Williams' Ointment absorbs the tumors, allays the intense itching (particularly at night after getting warm in bed), acts as a poultice, gives instant and painless relief, and is prepared only for Piles, Itching of the private parts, and nothing else.

Read what the Hon. J. M. Coffinberry, of Cleveland, says about Dr. Williams' Indian Pile Ointment: "I have used scores of pile cures, but it affords me pleasure to say that I have never found anything which gave such immediate and permanent relief as Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment."

THE WALTER A. WOOD HARVESTING MACHINES

Take the Lead.

In 1853, 500 Machines were sold.
In 1881, 40,413 were sold, and
47,000 have been ordered for 1882.

But the NE PLUS ULTRA of Harvesting Machinery is the Wood Twine Binder. This machine was first put upon the market in 1880, and 4,184 machines were sold that year. In 1881, the sales swelled to 10,034, and orders for over 12,000 have already been received for 1882.

THE WOOD TWINE BINDER!

Possesses these special points of excellence:

1—It is the most perfect automatic self binder ever made.
2—It effects a positive separation of the bound from the unbound grain.
3—The sheaf is formed and compressed without any strain on the twine until the knot is tied.
4—The grain is straightened by the action of the packer as it enters the binder.
5—The automatic uniform sizing of the bundle, thus relieving the driver of the care of stopping and starting the binder.

Last year's machines proved such a perfect success that they will be built substantially the same for 1882, with such improvements in minor details as may be found necessary.

Every farmer desiring to buy a self binder should examine the Wood Twine Binder before purchasing.

In Utah many of the Saints are putting away their extra wives in order to avoid the penalties of the new law. Let the good work go on, and the "Twin Relic" may be ended sooner than any man hoped for.

A large percentage of the Butler railroad bonus notes at Adrian remains unpaid. Having got the new railroad, the givers of the notes now conclude to let the railroad company whistle for their pay. Bring Tom Navin home. He can collect them, if they are collectable at all.

St. Joseph, Mo., is bound not to be outdone by a little Wolverine town like Adrian. Two city officials were recently arrested in New York for attempting to sell, without authority, $100,000 worth of city water bonds.—Thus the deeds of one good man continue to bear fruit after the man himself has vamoused.

The release of all suspects from the jails of Ireland indicates that the present coercive Irish policy is to be abandoned. Thus the government is forced by public sentiment to take a step which should never have been made necessary. It will gain no respect by the back-down, and the result will be to strengthen the Irish people in their fight for home rule and tenant rights.

The old dry goods house of A. T. Stewart will soon pass into history as a monument of the past. When Mr. A. T. Stewart died in 1876, it is claimed that $23,000,000 were invested in the concern. The house was then doing a business of about fifty millions a year, and kept an average cash balance in the bank of one million dollars. Within a year after Stewart's death, Judge Hilton issued his intolerant edict excluding the Jews from the Grand Union Hotel at Saratoga. Seligman, the New York banker, then prophesied that the concern would wind up its business inside of five years. The business dropped off fifty per cent. in one year, and the prophecy of Mr. Seligman has now literally come to pass. The day has gone by in this country when religious intolerance can be worked as a profitable business investment.

The money changers of wall street who gamble upon the business necessities of the country, and the missionary priests who impose on the credulity of the simple minded and thus raise fat sinecures for themselves for worthless services, both favor President Arthur's veto of the Chinese bill. This fact of itself is a very good reason why people in general should oppose it. If the sentiments of residents on the Pacific coast concerning the evil of Chinese immigration are not to be respected it would seem as tho' the interests of the people at large should control the decision of the question. Two hundred years ago the Yankee traders of New England imposed African slavery upon the Southern states against their will.—Now a few monied nabobs in the east essay the task of forcing Chinese immigration upon the Pacific coast against the unanimous protest of her people. Let the country be warned in time, and not invite the storm which to-day may seem no larger than a man's hand.

The Detroit Evening News says:

A prominent democratic congressman who favors making a revenue tariff the leading issue in the approaching campaign, remarked the other day: "As long as one-half the democrats in congress continue to vote against the other half on questions in which the people are mostly interested we will never succeed." Exactly; but how is the gentleman going to help himself? How can he make an issue between the present parties of a question upon which no two leaders of the same party are agreed? How can the democracy set up as a free trade or revenue tariff party when such men as Voorhees, Hendricks, Hewitt, Wallace, Randall and others equally prominent and powerful declare themselves for protection. The truth is that both the present parties have outlived the questions upon which they had any quarrel, and there is no difference whatever between them to-day on any great live national question.

There are lots of Bourbon Democrats and dyed-in-the-wool Republicans out this way, who can read these words and respond "Amen" in one breath. A strong, independent party, ably and honestly led, would not lack for followers.

MY AMATEUR FARM.

INTRODUCTORY.

All national wealth depends upon an enlightened agriculture.—DANIEL WEBSTER.

The first farmer was the first man and all historic nobility rests on possession and use of land.
—EMERSON.

Almost every man, who enjoys good health, who possesses wealth, who is blessed with happiness, is seized with an ambition at some time during his life to manage a farm.—This desire seized me in the early days of March, in the year of our Lord 1881. I had been through the treadmill of a collegiate course, had wrestled with Gunter, assisted at the burial of mechanics, performed the spread eagle at junior exhibition, had a collar bone broken at foot ball, had stolen an essay from Gibbon on the downfall of the Roman Empire, and had graduated with high honor, at the foot of the class. The star of destiny then led me into a law office, where for nine years I tustled with Tiffany and Blackstone, and became versed in the art of making the worse appear the better reason. I enjoyed the business confidence of several clients, but unfortunately for me or them, I scarcely know which, my clients were always hard up when the day of settlement came. I acquired something of a practice, having thrown two business firms into bankruptcy, obtained eleven divorces, cleared one man, charged with stealing his neighbors cow, on the plea of insanity; and ran for prosecuting attorney on the wrong ticket and got licked.

The whirligig of time then dropped me down in a printing office. For six years I had graced the editorial tripod, dunned delinquent subscribers, and endeavored to acquit myself impartially, regardless of sex or previous condition, as a purveyor of local news and neighborhood gossip. During these eventful years I had moved my typographical shop three times, had enjoyed six different boarding places, had started several manufacturing establishments, and built one new railroad—on paper—from Toledo to Grand Haven. In addition to these professional and business achievements I had been favored with honorable and lucrative official positions, having examined the schoolma'ams for four years, having taught a Sunday school class for three months and until the scholars were taken out of school by their parents, and having served as pathmaster of our road district for one year with distinguished credit. And yet, notwithstanding these worldly successes my exchequer was empty. A nickel dropped into it would rattle around like a buckshot in a base drum. Not that fortune had taken wings and flown away—not much—for fortune had never condescended to alight in my latitude. I had no trouble in obtaining day board, providing I rotated often enough, and with the blankets taken from our harness-maker on an advertising bill, I could keep warm on frosty nights. My editorial prerogative enabled me to dead head into all the Uncle Tom's Cabin and minstrel shows. I could smoke five cent cigars without money and without price while my debts incurred for paper and stock were generally paid after the most approved Greenback method, by giving my promissory note.

Still I was not happy. My mind wandered to green fields and pastures new, to babbling brooks and lowing herds, to ten per cent. mortgages and a fat bank account. After consulting a spiritual medium and conferring with my intended mother-in-law on the subject, I resolved to become a farmer. I longed for the day when I could hew my own wood, pump my own water, and feast my eyes upon my own onion patch; when I could harvest strawberries from my own vines, dig my own water-melons, and puff a cheroot in the "old arm chair" under my own fig tree. Accordingly I began to post up at once. I learned from Uncle Daniel Webster that an enlightened agriculture is the source of all national wealth. Then why, I reasoned, should it not be the fountain of individual wealth also? That distinguished scholar, Ralph Waldo Emerson, asserts that the first farmer was the first man, and that all nobility rests on the use of land. To be sure my first attempts at agriculture might not be enlightened, but with kerosene oil and lamp-wick at the present rock-bottom prices it would cost but a trifle to illuminate the subject; and if the first man succeeded in the garden, with no implements of husbandry but ten nails and a fig leaf, I certainly should not shrink from the task in these days of steam threshers and twine binders.

The first requisite to successful farming is to have a farm. How to procure one was the absorbing problem. I could not buy a farm. Modesty prevents my stating the reason why. I could not borrow one. The farmers in this longitude lend almost everything—their tools and machinery, grain and pasture, their hired help and their boys and girls—but I have never yet been able to find a man who would lend his farm. But I could rent one on shares. I soon discovered a victim and closed a lease for sixty acres just outside the city limits.—There were but two hickory stumps on the entire farm, and only ten rods of perpendicular fence. But the buildings were good and the land itself, with the crop of burdocks raised the previous year, was all there. Teams and tools were also needed, and an intelligent hired man to do the work. The former were easily obtained at the spring auctions. Farm auctions are a grand institution and one of the greatest agricultural helps of the age. At these auctions one can buy hay and grain, tools and implements of all kinds—which have seen service for years in the most respectable families—at twice their value, on a year's time at seven per cent. interest. All one needs is a little check, and the ability to sign his name to a promissory note. I attended four auctions in one week and purchased all the necessaries but a dog and a lumber wagon. I advertised for a hired man and Providence sent one along the next day. He was an intelligent Canadian, who had reared one family of children, and was nicely started on the aftermath with a second wife. I agreed to pay him a good salary, with the keep of one cow, half the butter and eggs, some pork and potatoes, his firewood, etc. As my intended mother-in-law had not yet formally joined the family I needed a housekeeper.—To meet this want I gave the hired man use of rooms in the house gratis and paid him for my table board. The man was an utter stranger, but he assured me emphatically that he was thoroughly posted in farm work, and why should I doubt his word? Columbus was his surname, and his christian name was Ichabod. What a poetical name? What a beautiful blending of sacred and mediaeval biography! I began my agricultural experiment on the first day of April, 1881, with high hopes and a happy heart.—My experience during the fifty-two succeeding weeks will be related in the subsequent chapters.

A HUMAN BAROMETER.

The Real Relation Between the Human Body and the Weather Scientifically Explained.

[Scientific American.]

One of the most valuable developments of modern science along the line of human necessity is the National Weather Bureau at Washington. Experience has shown that eighty-six per cent. of the predictions of the signal service are accurate; and these predictions are unquestionably of the greatest advantage to seamen, the agriculturalist and the entire commercial world. The service has proven its necessity by its usefulness, for in times past the facilities for fortelling atmospheric changes were meagre indeed. The only indications our fathers had of coming changes in the weather were aching limbs, twinging joints or painful corns. These "indications," though crude, were usually correct, and hence naturally suggest the enquiry as to the relation between the human system and the weather. The body is unquestionably an excellent barometer. It foretells changes in the atmosphere long before they occur, and this fact has been taken advantage of by physicians who, when all other agencies fail, prescribe a change of air, thus hoping the body may find an atmospheric condition better suited to its needs. And yet the real relation between the human body and the weather has never been fully understood, nor has there ever been, until now, a correct explanation of what rheumatism (which seems in league with the atmosphere) really is. It was originally thought by many to be a trouble in the joints, and as such was treated in the most strange, not to say, ridiculous manner. This theory became dispelled when the same trouble attacked the muscles, and the feeling then prevailed that it was purely a muscular disorder. But this idea was found to be too narrow, and now it is universally conceded that rheumatism is a blood disease. And what a terrible disease it is. It often comes without warning and prostrates the system with agony. Again its beginning is gradual, and its growth slow. In its acute form it manifests itself in every conceivable shape and always accompanied by intense pain. At one time it is inflamatory, at another neuralgic. Sometimes it assumes the form of gout, and again that of pleurisy or lumbago; but in whatever manner it appears it is terribly painful and always to be dreaded. The pain and annoyance of rheumatism are increased by its great danger, for it is liable to attack the brain or heart at any moment, thereby causing instant death. Indeed, nearly every case of heart disease with all its dreadful suddenness which has ever occurred, can be traced more or less directly to rheumatic causes. In its chronic form it stiffens the joints, contracts the muscles, undermines the health and ruins the life. It frequently attacks men and women who are apparently in perfect health. Indeed, it is as greatly to be dreaded as any possible form of physical woe.

But, however severe its effects may be, the exact cause of this blood trouble has been an undecided question, and it is only within the past year that any decision upon the subject has been reached. In order to fully determine what the cause of rheumatic disorders really was, certain authorities sent letters of inquiry from Washington to the leading practicing physicians of the land, and these inquiries were responded to quite generally, thus furnishing data of great value to science and mankind. The views held by the doctors are of a varied nature, but so overwhelming a proportion hold to one belief as to leave but little doubt that it is the correct one. This belief, briefly stated, is that uric acid in the blood causes rheumatism, and it is only by removing this poisonous acid that rheumatic or neuralgic troubles in all their terrible forms can be cured.

This being true, the important question arises: "How does this poisonous uric acid get into the blood, and how can it best be removed?" Uric acid is a waste material of the body which the kidneys should carry out, but because they are weakened they cannot throw it from the system. Restore the kidneys and you restore the power that will force the uric acid from the system and thus banish the rheumatic agonies which it causes. This is reason; it is science. No one whose kidneys are in a perfect condition was ever troubled with rheumatism, and no rheumatic sufferer, however slight the pain may be, has perfect kidneys. The conclusion of this truth is inevitable: perfect kidneys mean freedom from rheumatism.

When rheumatism has manifested itself in any special part of the body, attempts have usually been made to treat that part of the body. As a result, the pain has departed but the disease has remained, lying subtly concealed and ready to break out at some unexpected moment. Checking the pain in any single locality only scatters the disease through the system, when, if the seat of the disorder, which are the kidneys, were reached, a complete cure would be the result. The way therefore, to expel this rank and poisonous acid before it assumes an inflamatory or chronic form is by keeping the kidneys in absolute health. This is no easy thing to do, and no means has, until the past few years, been known which would successfully reach and affect these great organs. At last however, scientists have discovered that the leaves of a tropical plant, previously but little known to science and unknown to medicine, possessed marvelous qualities adapted for the kidneys. These leaves have been skillfully combined in the remedy now known as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. It is, up to the present time, the only known preparation that acts so directly on the kidneys, as to effectually cure the various dangerous forms of kidney disease, and hence remove all uric acid from the blood. As a result, the cures it has been the means of performing are really very remarkable. Indeed, there are thousands of persons in America to day who owe their restoration to health and entire freedom from rheumatism to this simple yet powerful remedy, which is known universally, manufactured in Rochester, N. Y., and sold in every drug store in the land.

From the doctors in the various cities of the United States who have certified over their own signatures to the scientific statement that uric acid in the blood is the cause of rheumatism, are a large number of Chicago and St. Louis physicians, among them being Dr. Adolph Uhlemeyer, Dr. Wm. Webb, Dr. John Frank, Dr. Edwin T. Webster, Dr. Benjamin F. Whitmore, Dr. Wm. T. Richardson, Dr. Robert T. Atkinson, Dr. Thos. F. Humbold, Dr. William M. McPheeters, Dr. William Johnson, Dr. Isaac N. Love, Dr. Clark Whittier, Dr. J. T. Hodgen, Dr. Thomas F. Dunigan, Dr. Nicholas Guhman, Dr. Antonia Prietts, Dr. Charles H. Goodman, Dr. Daniel Kuhn, Dr. Henry Newland, Dr. William S. Wortman, Dr. George T. Pitzer, Dr. Henry F. Ahlbrant, Dr. Elijah T. Frazier, Dr. Carl Spinzig, Dr. David B. Martin, Dr. Benjamin R. Taylor, Dr. James L. Logan, Dr. A. Heacock, Dr. Henry Kirchner, Dr. John J. Kane, Dr. Henry F. W. Kruse, Dr. William C. Glasgow, Dr. Jeremiah S. B. Alleyne, Dr. Thomas S. Comstock, Dr. Charles H. Hughes, Dr. Frederick Kolbenheyer, Dr. Joseph Heitzig, Dr. Edward A. De Calhol, Dr. Bernard Roemer, Dr. James M. Clopton, Dr. Charles V. Ware, Dr. Alphonzo Jaminet, Dr. James L. Kent, Dr. William S. Barker, Dr. Solomon C. Martin, Dr. Rudolph Studhatter, Dr. Louis P. Ehrmann, Dr. John A. King, Dr. Simeon E. Garlock, Dr. Theodore Foy, Dr. John E. Faber, Dr. Ernest F. Hoffman, Dr. Herman Nagle, Dr. Adolph Wislizenus, Dr. James L. Pirtle, Dr. Edward Rose, Dr. William H. Grayson, Dr. Hugo M. Starkloff, Dr. Robert M. Swaader, Dr. William N. Brennan, Dr. Temple S. Hoyne, Dr. Lyman Ware, Dr. Charles W. Hemstead, Dr. William J. Hawkes, Dr. T. C. Duncan, Dr. William R. Griswold, Dr. Lyman Bedford, Dr. A. B. Westcott, Dr. J. B. Bell, Dr. Charles M. Clark, Dr. W. H. Woodbury, Dr. Alfred H. Hiatt, Dr. Herman Hahn, Dr. Calvin M. Fitch, and Dr. John D. M. Carr.

The theory of the doctors as above explained finds its confirmation in the fact that when the kidneys have been cured, rheumatism is completely removed. This is not, of course, always accomplished instantly, for in a disease so subtle, the cure is often very slow, but under no other plan can any hope of permanent relief ever be found. There are hundreds of cases on record during the present winter of persons afflicted with rheumatic troubles of the worst order who have been entirely cured by following the theory above stated and using the remedy mentioned. Many of these persons had the very worst possible symptoms. Vague aches in different portions of the body were followed by agonies the most intense in some particular spot. Acute and throbbing pains succeeded each other and the coursing poisonous acid inflamed all the veins. Troubles which began with slight disorders increased to derangement the most serious. It is sad to think that all this suffering was endured when it could have been so easily relieved. Acting upon the theory and using the remedy above mentioned, the kidneys could have been restored to their usual vigor, the uric poison expelled from the system, the inflamation removed and the pain entirely banished.

These are some of the real and scientific facts regarding rheumatism, attested by the highest authority and they are, beyond question, the only correct ones ever brought forth. We are aware they are advanced ideas, but ten years hence they will be accepted belief and practice of the world. If people suffer from rheumatic troubles in the future and with these plain truths before them, they certainly can blame no one but themselves.

Remember all diseases of the stomach and intestines, urinary and digestive organs, cured by using Brown's Iron Bitters.

CIRCUIT COURT.

APRIL 13.—The case of Mary J. Dox vs. Nathan D. Yale and James Manning impleaded with Osee W. Webster, came on for trial this morning.—In this case Mary J. Dox, of Deerfield, gave Constable O. W. Webster an execution to serve on property belonging to Capt. Stout. The constable neglected to perform his duty and finally Stout moved away. Mrs. Dox now brings suit against Webster's surties, Messrs. Yale and Manning, for the amount of the execution.

Circuit court met, pursuant to adjournment, at 1:30 p. m., to-day, and when called to order, motion was made by the prosecuting attorney that Charles Colbath be sentenced for his attempted murder of Charles Cameron. Eloquent pleas for leniency toward the prisoner were made to the court by Colbath's counsel, Judge Stacy and Capt. C. R. Miller, which were promptly met at all points by Prosecuting Attorney Watts in a short but effective speech. The judge then arose and in well-chosen words explained to the prisoner the enormity of his crime, and the duty of the court regarding it, and concluded by sentencing him to fourteen years at hard labor in Jackson state prison.

APRIL 14.—The case of Dox vs. N. D. Yale and J. Manning was finished yesterday with a verdict of no cause of action.

Margaret A. Lazenby vs. J. H. Omo and Rebecca Omo is on trial to-day.—This case is an appeal from justice's court. The point in question is about as follows: Mrs. Lazenby claims to have sold some furniture and other personal property to the Omos, and not receiving her pay in full she sued in justice's court and obtained judgment against them. It is claimed by the defense that Mrs. Omo being a married woman, the judgment against her is not valid. The jury in the case brought in a verdict for the plaintiff for $201.74.

Robert Magill vs. Abram Mangus is an appeal case from a justice's court. The disagreement is in regard to a division line. The parties are from Tecumseh.

WOULD it not be a good plan for all those road districts bordering on Chicago turnpike to expend the road work this year in graveling that thoroughfare? This plan has been adopted for the past three years or more west of the village, and the pike is now getting to be in good condition. We commend the same suggestion to those districts lying on the Clinton and "Old Saline" roads.

THE April number of the Oriental Casket is on our table. This magazine is different from most of the kind, excelling in the selection of its reading matter and the admirable manner in which it is printed. The editor, Emerson Bennett, is fully equal to the emergency, and its publisher, L. Lum Smith, has the nerve to fill the announcement made in the prospectus. Send to 912 Arch street, Philadelphia, for a sample copy. It truly is a repository of literary gems.

THE Secretary of State has sent out circulars calling attention of the supervisors and assessors of Michigan to the provisions of the act to provide for the registration of births, marriages and deaths, by which it is made their duty to ascertain the births and deaths in each township, ward and city, which have occurred during the year 1881. This duty is to be performed between the 10th of April and the 1st of June, by which time the full returns have to be on file with the county clerk. Persons solemnizing marriges are liable to a fine not to exceed $100, and imprisonment until it is paid, not to exceed 90 days, for failure to hand in to the county clerk for record all marriages performed by them.

Adrian Press: "Godliness is profitable in all things," said Paul, and he supplemented the utterance with the further remark that "Cleanliness is next to godliness." A Deerfield lady recently entertained an itinerant, bible-banging preacher, and appointed him the best room and bed. At supper he ate as never man ate, slept the sleep of the just, blessed the family at prayers next morning, and departed, leaving behind him his benediction and such proofs of his moral and phyical squalor as would have disgraced a hog. The quarters he occupied have been thoroughly renovated and disinfected, and the lady has a moment's leisure to consider the problem, how any human being can be godly and yet be so ungodly nasty. For further particulars see Rev. Mrs. Smith.

Adrain Press: A good story is told of Newman Perkins, elected Justice of the Peace of Hudson township, Monday. He resides in Clayton, and several years ago bought a bill of goods, but owing to an overcharge or improper quality, or something of the kind, he wouldn't pay the bill unless a proper deduction was made. Finally Benedict the postmaster, had the bill sent him with a request that he turn it over to some Justice for collection, and promptly turned it over to Perkins who was a Justice, and Perkins as promptly settled, allowed damages, took out a good round fee for collection, and remitted the balance. The only mistake he made was in not suing himself and taking out the costs for Justice fees.

AN OPEN LETTER.

CENTRAL AMERICA,
March 5th, 1882.

TO MY FRIENDS AND CREDITORS:

News of a great calamity in my business affairs has just reached me through letters from Mr. Dutton and others. I deem it my duty to make known to you a few facts and probabilities. As some of you may know, I came to this country in November last at the request of certain gentlemen in New York, charged with the negotiation (in company with two gentlemen from N. Y.) of a very important and delicate business transaction, in which citizens of the United States, citizens of this republic and the government of this republic were interested. I expected to return to Tecumseh by the 20th of December, and my agreement was to that effect with the parties I came here to represent.

I am informed that had I returned at that time, the disaster above alluded to might have been averted. If this be so, I regret more than I can tell that I did not then return. But receiving no word at all from home, on account of the irregularity of the mail service on this coast, I could not know that my presence was unusually needed, and being naturally desirous to fulfil my mission here creditably to myself and satisfactorily to those most interested, I remained and am still endeavoring to bring about the desired result. On leaving home I gave Mr. Dutton my full power of attorney, as has been my custom for many years, and he has acted fairly and honestly in placing all our joint and individual property for distribution among you, in the hands of Mr. Wood, whom you all know to be an honorable and just man.

This distribution will be fairly made and nothing shall be reserved. You are justly entitled to all we have, and you shall have it with as little delay and expense as possible. Of this much I can assure you. But of the immediate probabilities of full payment of all claims I cannot speak so certainly.

All bankrupts promise early payment in full, and I am aware of the general estimate placed upon such pledges. I shall try to raise no false hopes, but will frankly say that should I die soon, I could see but small prospect of doing what I desire above all things else, to pay every debt to the last cent. The issues of life and death are not with us, but if my life is spared say two years, I have very great reason to believe that I could fully satisfy your claims. I may be able to do so much sooner. Indeed I think I shall, for I now have a matter in hand that gives the fairest promise of such results. My life is solemnly pledged to the accomplishment of your desires, and you may be sure of constant and unremitting labor on my part to this end. To those of you who still have faith in my honor, I feel an inutterable gratitude, and to those of you who denounce me as a fraud and swindler I feel no resentment, for I know your provocation is great. With great respect for all, I am

W. C. FITZSIMMONS.

MATRIMONIAL.

One of the pleasantest social gatherings which it has been our privilege to attend was assembled at the residence of Mr. & Mrs. W. Cleveland of East Tecumseh, on Wednesday evening, April 12, the occasion being the marriage of their daughter, Miss Eva Limbarker, and Mr. John T. Boyce, of Macon. The ceremony was performed at 9 o'clock by Rev. Mr. De Speldor of Macon. Miss Kate Boyce and Mr. Frank Benedict acted as bridesmaid and groomsman.

The bride and groom are too well known in Tecumseh and vicinity to admit of even a passing comment, they both having lived in the same neighborhood from their childhood. There were assembled numerous relatives, from the aged grandfather down to the little prattling nephew, besides many friends and acquaintances, who seemed to vie with each other in making the occasion one long to be remembered with pleasure. After many wishes for future happiness and prosperity, the guests repaired to the supper room where the tables were laden with every delicacy of the season, and many which only a farmer's wife could provide. Such a supper language fails me to describe, and in order to appreciate, one must be present to see as well as to sample. The guests brought many substancial tokens of their regard and esteem for the newly wedded pair a list of which we here append.

Nickle trimmed teapot—Mr. & Mrs. W. Cleveland.

Half doz. goblets and butter dish—Joe and De Vere Hanford.

Family bible—Mr. & Mrs. B. B. Morley.

Butter knife—J. Leslie Van Dorn.

Silver jelly castor—Jas. H. Aten.

Tidy—Miss Effa Hendershot.

Chromo—Burt Morley.

Glass water pitcher—Mr. & Mrs. A. G. Hall.

At a late hour the company separated with an invitation to meet at the residence of Mr. & Mrs. Thos. Boyce, on Tuesday April 18th, for a reception. These two gatherings will long be remembered as bright spots in life's pathway and may each and every one present feel that they have been benefited thereby.

Puts, Calls, and Straddles.

Mrs. Breezy, Puzzled and Curious, Demands an Explanation.

"I believe you have gambled in Wall street, Mr. Breezy," said Mrs. Breezy, helping her lord and master to a cup of coffee.

"I have speculated a little in stocks, dear, if that's what you mean," said Mr. Breezy, unfolding his napkin.

"Same thing," said Mrs. Breezy; "you can call it speculation; I know it's gambling. How do they do it anyway? I read about puts and calls and straddles, and I can make neither head or tail out of it. I suppose it's some horrid slang you men have invented."

"Well, no, dear," said Mr. Breezy, helping his better two-thirds to a chop. "It isn't exactly slang. You see, for instance, I buy a hundred short—"

"You do what?" cried Mrs. Breezy.

"I buy a hundred short," repeated Mr. Breezy.

"Well, what in the name of common sense do you mean by that?" asked Mrs. Breezy. "Why don't you talk United States—I mean English? You buy a hundred short, and what has short got to do with it?"

"If you will give me time I will explain, my dear," said Mr. Breezy. "You see if a man is long on stock he is—"

"Long on stock?" said Mrs. Breezy. "Now what are you getting to? First you are short and then you are long. What does a man want to get on a stock for, anyway?"

"My dear, if you will allow me—"

"To be sure. Go ahead. Tell me something about Wall street, but don't talk nonsense," said Mrs. Breezy.

"Well, my dear, we will suppose that I have a put on Wabash, and—"

"There you go again," said Mrs. Breezy. "Will you or will you not talk in a language I can understand? What is Wabash, anyway? I suppose it is another slang term?"

"No, that's a stock," said Mr. Breezy; "you see, dear, if I have a call on Wabash or Northwestern—"

"If you call on the Northwest?" cried Mrs. Breezy; "are you really going mad, Mr. Breezy? Well, I might expect as much from the life you have led recently. What with clubs and politics, you are going headlong to some terrible fate."

"My dear, it will be impossible for me to explain anything unless you will give me five minutes to do it in," said Mr. Breezy, with unusual warmth.—"Now, at the beginning of this week Omaha preferred started at 106½ and 105—"

"Omaha preferred?" asked Mrs. Breezy. "Why is it preferred? Who preferred it? What has Omaha got to do with New York and Wall street anyway, and what do you mean by 106½?"

"I shall have to give it up," said Mr. Breezy in a despairing voice.

"No, Mr. Breezy. I have started out to know something about Wall street, and I won't allow you to get out of it in that way," said Mrs. Breezy, setting herself more firmly in her chair. "Now, Mr. Breezy, you will please drop slang and come to something I can understand. For instance, what is a bull bear?"

"Ho, ha, ha-oh!" laughed Mr. Breezy.

"What do you mean by laughing at me, Mr. Breezy? I'm sure I—"

"Mr. Breezy, you haven't the manners of a savage," cried Mrs. Breezy, pushing back her hair, "and I don't believe you know any more about Wall street than a two weeks' old baby," and Mrs. Breezy made flagged time to the kitchen to take revenge upon the cook.—Brooklyn Eagle.

The Hotel Waiter.

As Seen by the "Texas Siftings" Man.

The hotel waiter is a man whose business is to make you wait for your meals unless you give him half a dollar to encourage him in making a fast record. The hotel waiter in the South is a colored man, who can make haste more slowly than any other creature on earth. Like the waiter that he carries the dishes on, he is black and polished. If you place half a dollar on the first-mentioned waiter, it makes an impression on the other waiter. He is called a waiter because he is supposed to wait on the guest, (the waited,) but the latter is really the waiter.

As soon as the waiter has got you in a chair, he hands you the bill of fare, and assumes an expression of countenance that is calculated to create the impression that he can read. The memory of the average waiter is extraordinary. Some say that it is because, like some men's consciences, it is never used; but that is not so. It is wonderful to see him standing solemnly and respectfully attentive behind a drummer's chair, while the hungry drummer reads off his selections, something in the following style.

"Consomme of macaroni; baked red snapper with brown sauce; sugar-cured tongue; green goose with apple-sauce (and don't you forget that apple-sauce); roast beef (an outside piece, cut thin); fricassee rabbit, farmers' style; baked macaroni au parmesan; braized pigeon a la Jardiniere; tripe fried in batter, with tomato sauce; onions; lima beans; mashed potatoes; squash, and chow-chow."

It is still more wonderful to see the waiter return, after an absence of forty-five minutes (during which time the drummer drinks three glasses of ice-water), with an entirely different assortment of food. This is where evidences of his wonderful memory shine forth like a parlor-match in a deep pantry. He remembers to forget everything.

"Forgot it, sah; very sorry, sah," the waiter says, as he hands you the mustard and smiles in a conciliatory way. And that brings us to smiles.

The colored waiter is all smiles. He smiles on the slightest provocation, whereas the white waiter of the North never smiles. The ordinary colored waiter sometimes becomes a head-waiter, after which he never smiles, but, with arms folded a la Napoleon on the Island of St. Helena, assumes a solemn and dignified position in the middle of the dining-room.

Domestic Recipes.

Devilled Ham.—Take six tablespoonfuls of sherry, two of best vinegar, one dessert-spoonful of current jelly, a large lump of butter, and cayenne to suit the taste. Slice the ham very thin, and put it in the chafing dish; having mixed the dressing together, pour it on the ham, and let them cook together for a few moments, stirring it well, when it will be ready to serve. A nice dish for luncheon.

Apple Float.—Pare and core twelve large, green apples, boil or bake in as little water as possible, and press through a fine hair sieve while cold; sweeten to taste, add the whites of two eggs well beaten, and then beat the whole together until stiff. Grate nutmeg over it. To be eaten with cream.

Lemon Cheese Cakes.—Take two ounces of butter, two eggs, three tablespoonfuls of moist sugar, the grated rinds and juice of two lemons, and two stale Savoy biscuits (or hard crackers of any kind), also finely grated. Mix all together, and then simmer over the fire for a few minutes in a saucepan. Have ready some patty-pans lined with puff paste. Put a very small quantity of the mixture into each, and bake for fifteen or twenty minutes in rather a quick oven. This quantity will make about one dozen and a half cheese cakes.

Lemon Creams.—Pare four lemons very thin, and throw the peel into twelve tablespoonfuls of water. Squeeze the juice over eight ounces of finely-powdered sugar. Well beat the yolks of ten eggs, then add the peel, water and juice gradually, and strain it through the muslin into a stewpan. Stir it one way over a gentle fire till it becomes pretty thick, but, do not let it boil. Serve in custard cups.

White Lemon Creams.—Are made in exactly the same way, but using the whites instead of the yolks of eggs. Delicious tartlets may also be made by adding to the preparation a little finely-crumbed sponge cake, and proceeding as with lemon cheese cakes.

Swiss Cream.—Boil a pint of thick cream with a slice or two of lemon peel, and pour into a bowl with a little crushed lump sugar. When quite cool, add the juice of two lemons. Soak one-quarter pound of macaroons in a glass dish with a little sherry or brandy, and pour the cream over them.

Sponge Pudding.—Take twelve eggs, one quart of sweet milk, one-quarter pound of flour, and one-quarter pound sugar. Make a blanc-mange of the milk and flour, adding the sugar when cooked. When cool add the eggs, the whites and yolks having been beaten separately, and as light as possible. Pour the mixture into a pudding-dish, place the dish in a pan of boiling water, and put it in the oven. Bake till firm. Be careful not to bake too long. Serve hot or cold with whipped cream sauce flavored and sweetened to taste.

Pudding Sauce.—When the sponge pudding is to be eaten hot, an excellent sauce for it is made of sugar and butter whipped to a cream, and fresh berries (strawberries preferred), or fruit crushed and added with a little wine or spice, if desired. If properly made, no better sauce can be used for sponge pudding.

Parsnip Oysters.—Boil parsnips until tender, and mash well. To a pint of mashed parsnips add a tablespoonful of butter, three well-beaten eggs, salt and pepper to taste, and enough flour to hold the mixture together. Make into small, flat balls, and fry in butter until brown.

Contempt of Court.

The famous and witty John Baldwin, for indulging in contemptuous language in an Allegany County Justice's Court, was sentenced to imprisonment in the Angelica Jail for twenty days. By his own assurance and daring, however, he managed to escape. After the Justice had pronounced this sentence upon Baldwin he proceeded to draw the mittimus which empowered the constable to take the disrespectful lawyer into custody. The Justice, who was an indifferent and slow penman, was a long time in preparing the somewhat technical document. Baldwin, who watched the proceedings with the deepest interest, waited until the magistrate was about to sign the warrant, when he suddenly seized a large ink-stand full of ink and poured its contents over the fearful paper, destroying in an instant the hard work of an hour. This done, he mounted his horse and escaped into Steuben County beyond the reach of another mittimus.

In the early days of Buffalo a leading lawyer was arguing a cause in the Court of Common Pleas where one of the side judges presided—the first judge not being on the bench. To show his superiority, the Judge often put irritating questions to the counsel. To help the matter along, the two other side judges on the bench annoyed the lawyer in a similar manner.

At last he could endure this no longer, and pausing in the midst of his argument, he said: "If your Honors will excuse me I would like to say that this court reminds me of a Virginia rag-bag team."

"Well, sir, what kind of a team do you call that?" asked the Judge.

"It is a team, your Honor, composed of two mules and a jackass."

For this the lawyer was fined $15 and two days' imprisonment.—Rochester Union.

The Doctor's Last Happy Resort.

Evansville, Ind., Jan. 11, 1882.

I recently had a very difficult case of Consumption. I treated it in the most scientific manner possible, but to no effect; patient grew gradually worse. Rather than give up, and as a last resort, I decided, much against my wish, to use a remedy that had cured one of my former patients.—Greatly to my surprise, the patient began to gain, and in a much shorter time than I dared to ever expect, she was completely cured. The name of this remarkable remedy is Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. I now use it altogether in my practice.—Leading M. D., Evansville.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures while the unparalleled demand with which it stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

ALL SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, ALL INFLAMMATION of LUNGS and BOWELS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, CHILBLAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, ERYSIPELAS, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all disorders attendant with INFLAMMATION.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years

This Ointment has been used by the people through out the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

The Lapeer Democrat tells a story of an aged and crippled soldier who came into Lapeer county recently from the Soldiers' home at Dayton, expecting to find love and care at the home of his son. He didn't get it, being so coldly received that he had to make the best of his way back to Dayton.

New Bloomfield, Miss., Jan. 2, 1830.

I wish to say to you that I have been suffering for the last five years with a severe itching all over. I have heard of Hop Bitters and have tried it. I have used up four bottles, and it has done me more good than all the doctors and medicines that they could use on or with me. I am old and poor but feel to bless you for such a relief by your medicine and from torment of the doctors. I have had fifteen doctors at me. One gave me seven ounces of solution of arsenic; another took four quarts of blood from me. All they could tell was that it was skin sickness. Now, after these four bottles of your medicine, my skin is well, clean and smooth as ever.

Worth Remembering.

Now that good times are again upon us, it is worth remembering that no one can enjoy the pleasantest surroundings if in bad health. There are hundreds of miserable people going about to-day with disordered stomach, liver or kidney, when a bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic would do them more good than all the medicines they have ever tried.

A Mt. Pleasant man named Quarters was rescued from the Saginaw river where he was seeking a watery grave. The first thing he did after getting so he could talk was to roundly curse his preserver for not getting his hat also.

TO GRATIFY HIS WIFE,

An Interesting Story—A Hopeless Case Cured—A Good Reason for Happiness.

Statement of Mr. Washington Monroe, of Catskill, Green County, New York.

"For many years I had suffered from a complaint which the physicians called Gravel. I had employed some of the most noted doctors without obtaining any permanent relief and for a long time [illegible] the circumstances said I must die. Finally my wife induced me to try a bottle of Dr. Kennedy's 'Favorite Remedy' which she had somewhere heard of or seen advertised. Without the slightest faith in it, but solely to gratify her, I bought a bottle of a druggist in our village. I used that and two or three bottles [illegible] make a long story short—I am now as healthy a man as there is in the country.

Since then I have recommended Favorite Remedy to others whom I know to have suffered from Kidney and Liver complaints, and I assure the public that the Favorite Remedy has done its work with a similar completeness in every single instance, and I trust some other sick and discouraged mortal may hear of it and try the Favorite Remedy as I did."

A correspondent writing to the Clinton News from Tecumseh says:—"There is a decided boom in real estate this spring, thousands of dollars' worth of property changing hands, while nearly every transaction displays an absence of mental equilibrium with either the vender or purchaser. Robt. Cairns declined $175 per acre for his luxurious home just west of the village, a sum which in the days of Lenawee pioneer history would have secured quite a little home for the woodman who braved the howling of wolves and perils of pioneer life. Ex-Sheriff Cairnes has taken up his residence on his new farm about a mile and a half south of the village, for which he paid $108 per acre, and B. F. DePuy looked and smiled at the man who offered him $95 per acre for his farm, and to receipt the same in government bonds. To men of ordinary ambition it must be a consoling thought to know there are "tax lands" and a "burnt district" in Michigan where the worthy laborer will have a fair chance to invest a few paltry hundreds in free soil. Verily a first-class farm in old northern Lenawee at the present time is "a luxury which only the wealthy enjoy."

Mr. John D. Brothers, of Portsmouth, O., writes: "Two years ago I suffered from a severe attack of malarial fever; I was brought very low to death's door; I had never fully recovered, and often was distressed with billiousness, headache, sinking chills, night sweats, indigestion and painful urination. About three months ago I noticed an advertisement of Brown's Iron Bitters in a Cincinnati paper.—From the first, it seemed to be just the medicine I had long needed. I am now just as strong and hearty as a buck, and weigh nearly one half as much again as I did 3 months ago."

Adrian Record; All the gravel necessary to gravel the road from Ridgeway village to Britton's Station has been obtained, and there is not the slightest hindrance to its use except—well, there isn't money to move the stuff. The people own the gravel by right of discovery, but it will make them scratch gravel to "raise the ducats" to utilize it.

THE proprietors of the Adrian Times are making a strong effort to get up a large list for their daily edition in this place. It is a good paper for our people to take, for it contains the latest telegraphic news of the associated press, the markets by telegraph, as well as fuller local and county news than our people can get through any other source. While in Adrian Wednesday, we were informed that if a good sized list could be secured here, the publishers of the Times would make arrangements to have the paper here by special messenger, before six o'clock each evening. This would be a great convenience. Mr. A. M. Stevens is the agent for this paper here, and the terms, delivered, are only one shilling a week, or fifty cents a month.

Gents—Whoever you are, I don't know; but I thank the Lord and feel grateful to you to know that in this world of adulterated medicines there is one compound that proves and does all it advertises to do, and more. Four years ago I had a slight shock of palsy, which unnerved me to such an extent that the least excitement would make me shake like the ague. Last May I was induced to try Hop Bitters. I used one bottle, but did not see any change; another did so change my nerves that they are now as steady as they ever were. It used to take both hands to write, but now my good right hand writes this. Now, if you continue to manufacture as honest and good an article as you do, you will accumulate an honest fortune, and confer the greatest blessing on your fellow men that was ever conferred on mankind. Tim Burch.

CIRCUIT COURT.

APRIL 20.—The case of the People vs. Palmer was finished this morning, the jury bringing in a verdict of guilty. Palmer, who, it will be remembered, is the Riga man who stole a nugget of gold and sold it to W. F. King, will be sentenced Saturday.

The case of the People vs. R. J. Jewell was continued to the next term for trial.

The case of Chas. S. Kuney vs. David, Charles and Lyman Dutcher, action for trespass on the case for assault and battery. The assault is alleged, by Kuney to have occurred in June, 1880. He claims $5000 damages.

An Interesting Photograph.

We have received from W. H. Bearley, of Detroit, Mich., a large photograph of a gem of scenery near the Glen House in the White Mountains, and any one who desires to inspect it will find it adorning the sanctum sanctorum of this paper. This is one of the scores of interesting places visited by the popular annual excursions "From Detroit to the Sea," via. the Grand Trunk R. R. and St. Lawrence River Steamers, and indicate the character of the scenery along this popular route of summer pleasure travel. These excursions have been carried on successfully for the past six years, and are each under the personal management of Mr. Bearley, from whom a circular of particulars can be obtained by addressing him enclosing one 3 cent stamp, or by sending 30 cents for illustrated guide book.

Mr. Alexander Grunnell, of Albany, N. Y., says: "I had been for years troubled with great weakness of my digestive organs, which seemed to be always out of fix. Most usually I suffered from constipation, and at other times a severe running-off at the bowels would set in. No remedy I had ever tried would regulate this function until I tried Brown's Iron Bitters. It really benefited me from the first day I used it. My habits are now perfectly regular, and as a strengthener of the digestive organs, I think Brown's Iron Bitters worth its weight in diamonds.

History of the English People.

Green's justly celebrated "Larger History of the English People," ought certainly now to find a place in every home. The Elzevir edition, in five handy and tasteful volumes, cloth binding, all for $1.50, (by mail $1.80) is certainly a specimen of book-making that will delight the eye of those who rejoice in beautiful books, and is hardly less than a marvel in economy of cost. But the Model Octavo edition, in one volume, utility binding, caps the climax for cheapness—only 50 cts. or by mail 65 cts. These editions are being published by the Useful Knowledge Publishing Co., 162 William St., New York, and are examples of the quality and prices of numerous standard works which they are publishing. At these prices they sell only to buyers direct, discounts to dealers and agents being impossible, and the editions published are limited to the orders which reach them promptly. Catalogues and specimen pages free on request.

Popular Science Monthly for May, 1882.

"Methods and Profit of Tree-Planting," by N. H. Egleston, is the subject that opens the May "Popular Science Monthly," and, in the long run and the large way, there are few subjects more important. This is one of the cases in which the selfishness of individuals, always short-sighted, slowly accumulates into great public calamity. But this paper is not a mere lament over the ruthless destruction of our forests; it is devoted to the remedy, the practical benefits, and rules of successful tree-culture. In a three-page article Herbert Spencer characterizes "Goldwin Smith as a Critic," and his estimate of him is not high. The paper of Alfred Russell Wallace on "Monkeys," like all that this author writes is most interesting. It is one of the freshest discussions we have seen in a long time upon a threadbare subject. Mr. Le Sueur criticises the new book of Judge Stallo; and Dr. Bachelor gives some information on "The Tree that bears Quinine." There is a full and very interesting "Sketch of Sir John Lubbock," and an unusual budget of miscellaneous matter at the close of the number. The contents of the May Monthly are varied and substantial, without being striking or exceptional. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 50c per number; $5 per year.

A Remarkable Escape.

Mrs. Geo. C. Clarke, of Port Dalhousie, Ontario, states that she had been confined to her room for a long time with that dreadful disease, Consumption. To H. W. Longfellow.

ON HIS BIRTHDAY, 27TH FEBRUARY, 1887.

Where limpid verse to limpid verse succeeds
Smooth as our Charles, when, fearing least he wrong
The new moon's mirrored skiff, he glides along,
Full without noise, and whispers in barreeds.

With loving breath of all the winds his name
Is blown about the world; but to his friends
A sweeter secret hides behind his fame,
And love steals shyly through the loud acclaim
To whispers at firesides and at household ends.

As I muse backward up the checkered years
Where so much good is given, so much is taken,
Blessings in both kinds, such as cheapen tears,—
But hush! this is not for profaner ears;
Let them drink molten pearls nor dream the cost.

As naught but nightshade grew upon earth's ground;
Love turned all his heart's ease, and the more
Fate tried his bastions, she but forced a door
Leading to sweeter manhood and more sound.

Even as a wind-waved fountain's swaying shade
Seems of mixed race a gray wraith shot with sun
So through his trial faith translucent rayed
Till darkness, half disnatured so, betrayed
A heart of sunshine that would fain o'errun.

Surely if skill in song the shears may stay
And of its purpose cheat the charmed abyss,
If our poor life be lengthened by a lay,
He shall not go, although his presence may,
And the next age in praise shall double this.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

A BIRD DRAMA.

Toward the end of May last year I had the rare opportunity of watching from beginning to end a little affair in the sparrow family; and I wish to say in beginning that although I may not have interpreted them correctly the events took place exactly as I shall tell them. Nothing is exaggerated, and nothing could be plainer, to my eyes, than the motions and emotions of the little creatures I so closely watched. That I was able to follow the small drama to its end was because of the fortunate position of the family, remote from other sparrow nests and in full view of the window I occupied.

The first intimation I had of trouble was the loud and persistent chirping of a sparrow, a cry of distress. For some time I could not get sight of him, but just at evening when I was looking closely at a pear tree from which the sound came a cock-sparrow flew out alighting on the peak of a low roof in my sight, and resumed at once the very sound I was in search of. He was the one in trouble, and the reason was plain—he had lost a leg.

He stayed on the roof some time, uttering at short intervals the pitiful cry of distress, and at last flying to the pear tree again established himself in an angle formed by two twigs starting horizontally from the same point. Here he settled himself comfortably after some fluttering and here remained.

The first thing in the morning I heard the sorrowful cry again and hastened to the window to see how he was this morning and if possible find out where he lived. He had left the tree and seated himself on the ledge over a false window plainly visible from my chair. The sill, the upper ledge and the edge of the roof overhead were the scene of the whole drama that followed. From his at-home manner in that spot I concluded that he lived near, for I have noticed that sparrows usually have a particular place on which to alight before going into the nest. They perch a moment, look around, flirt the tail and then dash into the house.

While I watched him a hen sparrow alighted near him, scolding harshly, upon which he flew away and she followed. He alighted upon the pear tree, she perched near him and talked to him, not in the scolding tone that had driven him away from the ledge, but in a remonstrating or arguing tone. He answered her in a low conversational chirp, but when she drew nearer he again took wing.

This went on at intervals all day. She did not appear to be angry and trying to drive him away, nor did she seem to be sympathetic with his trouble. It looked as if she was urging him to do something, I could not make out what. He kept almost entirely to the ledge and the sill, and now I saw where they lived. It was in a thick clump of honeysuckle vines that ran over a doorway not more than three feet from the sill where he had taken his position. Once or twice on this day he entered the honeysuckles, when there ensued a great chattering and he soon came out.

It was pitiful to see the poor little creature and hear his loud cry all day. He lay flat on his breast, often his head drooped and I thought he was dying. Every little while the hen would come to visit him, alighting near him, sometimes quietly talking, sometimes scolding, on which he would fly away. To-day also I saw that the hen carried food into the honeysuckles, and I concluded she had babies to feed, and perhaps her remonstrances with him had been that he did not help. Evidently she had a good deal on her hands, hungry babies and a disabled spouse.

He was very awkward on his one leg, could not stand up a moment and when he moved used his wings violently. Several times he fell off the window sill, but caught himself by means of his wings and flew back. Much of the time he lay with his bill open and seemed so weak I thought he could not live another day. But the next morning a new emotion came to brace him up, including him to do what Mrs. Doubey failed—"make an effort."

Madam evidently made up her mind to shake off a useless partner, and early in the day a rival appeared on the scene. The cock who assumed this despicable role was a tumbled up sort of a fellow, who looked as though he needed a wife to keep his coat in order, and I had my doubts whether that little hen had made a wise choice. He would alight on the sill, One-leg being on the ledge above. Here he would plant himself in a dogged way, in a crouching attitude, and call, though not with the least spirit. His feathers were ruffled, not bristled up in anger or in fighting humor; and in fact I could not resist the conviction that he was a hen-picked coward ordered to go out and fight, and dutifully, but not heartily, obeying.

The knowing bird on the ledge evidently despised him. He answered him, call for call and louder than his challenger but did not deign to touch him till the ragged-looking fellow attempted to enter the honey-suckles, when instantly the little hero flew furiously at him and he retired. Then madam came out and scolded him, and he returned to his ledge to rest and get his breath.

After awhile another candidate for her favor arrived on the sill. This was a different looking bird; for much alike as are sparrows there are differences of manner and looks readily seen on close examination. The second wooer was as bright and full of life as a bird could be. No crouching down in this case, no weak-forced challenge. He looked sanctily at the unfortunate he had come to cut out, bristled up and delivered his call in a loud, defiant tone, and was ready to battle at once for the home in the honeysuckles. This fellow too was a different foe in the eyes of the poor little cock on the ledge. He did not answer his challenge; he crouched low against the house; his head sank, and I thought he was dying.

So perhaps did the rival, for he flew boldly into the vines. That roused the drooping hero. In defense of his hearthstone he would rise almost from the dead. He flew instantly and drove him away, returning at once to his post. After a little madam herself alighted on the sill with the rival in full view of her despised spouse; but he put them to rout like a whirlwind.

On this day he took up a new stand, on the very corner of the roof, where he could overlook the window and also see the honey-suckle vines from both sides. There he would lie a long time calling and driving away those who presumed to interfere with his domestic affairs. This was an exciting day about the honey-suckles full of challenges, scoldings, furious attacks and probably, too, suffering, for the little hero often seemed exhausted and I feared he would not survive his accumulated calamities.

Once, toward night, madam alighted in the usual place with one who was plainly a lover. He began to puff out his feathers and assume the airs of a suitor, when down upon him from his post on the roof came the avenging husband and drove him away in a twinkling. The hen did not fly, however, and her spouse alighted near her. She began to scold, but he tried to make love to her. "Come," said his manner, "let's make up. I shall not always be so helpless as now." But every time he tried to approach her she turned her bill toward him, talking vigorously. "You're a good-for-nothing," one could almost hear her say; "you'll neither help me yourself nor let any one else, and here I'm nearly worked to death and the babies like to starve." Then he coaxed again, but she refused him harshly and flew to the nest.

This curious scene took place toward evening, but the next morning things had changed. He was better and brighter everyway, could get about much more easily on his one leg and I saw no more of rivals. He went in and out of the honeysuckles quite often. Sometimes he was greeted by a scolding and sometimes by the fine chirping of the little ones, but he went as often as he chose. Under this new aspect of things he began to woo back his mate, and after awhile she would come out on the window sill in amiable mood and great love-making went on. Evening closed on restored peace and harmony in the little household.

The next morning the little hero was able to hop upon the greenhouse roof for crumbs, standing up pertly on his single leg, though his movement was a queer one-sided sort of jerk, which gave him a most comical air. Now his spouse accompanied him to the ground and the pear tree, as do all decorous sparrow wives, and before noon both devoted themselves to the charming task of teaching the little ones to fly.

Often during the day I saw one little fussy sparrowling squatted on the window sill which had been the scene of his papa's suffering and pain, another on the greenhouse roof, both shrieking for food, for he, for the world to see how bravely they got on, while the busy mamma coaxed them in vain to try another flight, alternately encouraging with a crumb or reproving with a slight peck on the head, and the one-legged hero—his troubles now happily at an end—perched on the edge of the roof, peering over with greatest interest at the pretty scene.—Olive Thorne Miller in our Continent.

Paved with Extinct Stars.

In a recent scientific paper, Sir John Lubbeck says: "Like the sand of the sea, the stars of heaven have ever been used as effective symbols of number, and the improvements in our methods of observation have added fresh force to our original observations. We now know that our earth is but a fraction of one out of at least 75,000,000 words. But this is not all. In addition to the luminous heavenly bodies, we can not doubt that there are countless others, invisible to us from their great distance, smaller size, or feebler light; indeed, we know that there are many dark bodies which now emit no light, or comparatively little. Thus in the case of Procyon, the existence of an invisible body is proved by the movement of the visible star.—Again I may refer to the curious phenomena presented by Algol, a bright star in the head of Medusa. This star shines without change for two days and thirteen hours; then, in another three and a half hours, reassumes its original brilliancy. These changes seem certainly to indicate the presence of an opaque body which intercepts at regular intervals part of the light emitted by Algol. Thus the floor of heaven is not only 'thick inlaid with patines of bright gold,' but studded also with extinct stars—once probably as brilliant as our own sun, but now dead cold, as Humboldt tells us that our sun itself will be some seventeen millions of years hence."

The Dangers of Careless Surgery.

It is related that one distinguished surgeon lately left a sponge, and another a pair of forceps, in the cavity after an abdominal operation. Yet another would have left a large seal ring in the same place but for a gentle reminder from a fellow-practitioner. It seems hard that surgeons should run the awful risk of losing jewelry and instruments by sewing them up in the vitals of their patients. It is due to them to say, however, that the rule is to carefully count the sponges and instruments during the progress of such operations. This is well. It would be a dreadful matter, for instance, if a man should have a couple of chairs or a house and lot grafted into him while he was being treated for a gunshot wound.

PRESENTIMENTS.

Golden Rule.

Much apprehension has been occasioned throughout America from the announcement made by Professor Proctor that the return in nineteen years of the great comet of last summer will cause the destruction of the earth. But while people are becoming so strangely exercised over this announcement, an event of far more serious importance, which is taking place today, seems to be almost wholly overlooked. The nature of this most vital subject can be best explained by relating the following experiences:

Bishop E. O. Haven, known to the entire land, was unaccountably awakened one night out of a sound sleep, and lay awake until morning. His mind seemed unusually active, and he not only reviewed his past life, which has been an eventful one, but laid extensive plans for the future. He did not feel especially ill, but could not account for the unusual activity of his brain, nor for the restlessness which seemed to possess him. In the morning he had but little appetite, but was apparently well in other respects. In a few days however, he began to feel restless and morbid, although he tried earnestly to overcome the feeling which had taken possession of him. But try as he would the shadow of some evil seemed to follow him, and he was conscious of a gradual sinking and wasting away of all his physical faculties. He had been an earnest and diligent worker, and in his zeal frequently over-taxed his strength, and being absorbed in his duties failed to observe the common symptoms with which he was afflicted, thus permitting the work of destruction to go on unheeded. But the end finally came in a most peremptory manner. Shortly before his death he wrote a letter—the last one he ever indited—in which he speaks as follows: "A belief that death is near affects different minds differently, but probably all who are in a fair condition of physical and mental strength instinctively shrink from it with an indefinable dread and horror. A dying man is no more able of himself to foresee his own destiny or the destiny of those he leaves than he was before he began to die."

The recent and sad death of Hon. Clarkson N. Potter is one of the most serious warnings ever given in the long list of innumerable cases of fatal neglect. It is not sufficient to say that many other brilliant men, including Everett, Sumner, Chase, Wood, Wilson and Carpenter, were swept away by the same fatal trouble. The question is, were these men sufficiently careful of their health, and could they have been saved? The Albany Argus, in speaking of Mr. Potter's sudden illness and death, says:

"One of the physicians who attended Mr. Potter here was interviewed last evening. He stated that Mr. Potter's inability to converse had for some time served to baffle the physicians in their efforts to determine the root of his illness. It seems, however, that Mr. Potter, some two years ago, suffered a slight attack of kidney disease. Unwise dependence upon a robust constitution and naturally perfect health, and neglect of proper clothing, doubtless sowed the seeds of a disease that needed but some such personal neglect as that of Tuesday morning to develop. From the symptoms at first shown, it was thought that his only trouble was nervous prostration; but his long continuance in a semi-unconscious state led to the belief that his illness was seated in a chronic difficulty more mysterious and dangerous.

Up to the latter part of last year Mr. Edward F. Rook, a member of the New York stock exchange, was doing business in Wall street, New York. He had everything to encourage him, and make life happy, but was the victim of unaccountable uneasiness. His experience as described by one who knew, was as follows: "At unexpected times, and on occasions when he had the greatest reason to feel joyous he was irritable and haunted with strange feelings of discontent. He endeavored to check these feelings and appear pleasant, but it required a great effort to do so; after which he would again relapse into his former morbid mood. This feeling continued for a number of months, when he became conscious of an added sensation of lassitude. He was tired even when resting, and although experiencing no acute pain, had dull, aching sensations in his limbs and various parts of his body. Shortly afterward his head began to ache most frequently and his stomach failed to digest properly. Being told that he was suffering from malaria he consulted an eminent physician, who informed him that his kidneys were slightly effected, and gave him medicine to restore them. But he grew worse instead of better. He then consulted other eminent doctors of another school and was informed that he had a brain difficulty somewhat in the nature of a tumor, but in spite of all efforts to the contrary he continued to grow worse. At this time his condition was terrible. What were at first simple symptoms had developed to terrible troubles. He was flushed and feverish, constantly uneasy, and yet always weary. He had an intense appetite one day and very little the next. His pulse was irregular, his breathing labored, and every moment of existence was a burden. These disastrous symptoms continued, his face and body became discolored, his heart was irregular in its action, and his breath came in short, convulsive gasps. He grew constantly worse, notwithstanding the utmost precautions of his friends and finally died in the greatest agony. After his death, an examination as to its actual cause was made, when his brain was found to be in perfect condition, and the reason of his disease was of an entirely different nature.

The experiences which have been cited above all had a common cause and were each the result of one disease. That disease, which so deceitfully, yet surely removed the people above mentioned was Bright's disease of the kidneys. In the case of Mr. Rook the examination after death, while showing the brain to be in perfect condition, revealed the terrible fact that he was the victim of a slight kidney trouble, which had gone on unchecked, until it resulted in acute Bright's disease. The leading physicians and scientists of the world are fast learning that more than one-half the deaths which occur are caused by this monstrous scourge. It is one of the most deceitful maladies ever known to the human race. It manifests itself by symptoms so slight and common, as to seem unworthy of attention; and yet these very insignificant symptoms are the first stages of the complaint known in the history of the world. Thousands of people have died from troubles that are called heart disease, apoplexy, pneumonia, brain fever, and similar diseases, when it was, in fact Bright's disease of kidneys. The ravages of this disease have been greatly increased from the fact that until recent years no way was known to prevent its beginning nor check its increase when it has become once fixed upon the system. Within the past two years, however, we have learned of more than four hundred pronounced cases of Bright's disease, many of them much worse than those above described, and most of whom had been given up by prominent physicians, who have been completely cured. The means used to accomplish this end has been Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, manufactured in Rochester, N. Y., a remedy that has won its way into the confidence of the public solely upon the remarkable merits it possesses. As a result, it is more widely used and thoroughly praised than any medicine which has ever been before the American public. Indeed there is not a drug store in the entire land where it cannot be found.

Although Bright's disease is so common in cities, it is still more prevalent in the country. When eminent physicians in the largest cities are not able to recognize Bright's disease, it is only natural that in the country, where there are few physicians of any kind, and those few so unacquainted with the disease as to call it by some other name, it should rage terribly and yet unknown to the ones who are suffering with it. Thousands of people can look back and recall the death of friends from what was supposed to be some common complaint, when it was really Bright's disease, AND NO ONE KNEW IT. The terrible pleuro-pneumonia, which has been so dreaded, is usually the result of uremic or kidney poison. Lung fever can be traced to a similar source. Most cases of paralysis arise from the same difficulty, as well as innumerable fevers, lung, throat, head and bowel troubles. A vast number of ladies have suffered and died from complaints common to their sex called, perhaps, general debility, when, could the real cause have been known, it would have been found to be Bright's disease, masquerading under another name. In marked contrast to the sad cases which have been above described, are the experiences of many prominent people who were as low as any of the persons mentioned, but who were remarkably restored to former health and vigor by this same remedy. Among this number are the following prominent names: Col. John C. Whitner, Atlanta, Ga.; B. F. Larrabee, Boston, Mass.; Gen. C. A. Heckman, Phillipsburg, N. J.; Rev. D. D. Buck, D. D., Geneva, N. Y.; Dr. F. A. McManus, Baltimore, Md.; Edwin Fay, Davenport, Iowa; Rev. A. C. Kendrick, LL. D., Rochester, N. Y.; J. S. Matthews, Portland, Mich.; C. W. Eastwood, New York; Dr. A. A. Ramsey, Albia, Iowa; Chancellor C. N. Sims, D. D., Syracuse, N. Y.; Dr. S. P. Jones, Marjenette, Wis.; T. S. Ingraham, Cleveland, O.; Henry T. Champney, Boston, Mass.; Elder James S. Prescott, North Union, O., who is a prominent member of the Shaker community, and many others.

To all candid minds the force of the above facts must come with special power. They show the importance of promptness and attention to the first symptoms of disordered health before disease becomes fixed and hope departs. They show how this can successfully be done, and that the dangers which await neglect can only with difficulty be removed.

Snatched From the Grave.

THE SURGEON'S KNIFE.

Mr. Simeon Tietsell, of Saugerties, N. Y., had been treated for seven years by various physicians for what they call Stricture of the Urethra, without benefit. He finally consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Roundout, N. Y., who found his trouble to be Urinary Calculi or Stones in the Bladder. The doctor at once removed the foreign bodies with the knife and then gave his great Blood Specific "Favorite Remedy" to prevent their reformation. The entire treatment was eminently successful, and Mr. Tietsell's recovery was rapid and perfect.

"Favorite Remedy" is a specific in all Kidney and Bladder diseases, it is equally valuable in cases of Bilious Disorders, Constipation, of the Bowels, and all the ills of life apparently inseparable from the constitutions of women. Try it. Your druggist has it, and its cost is only one dollar a bottle. The lucky man is he who puts this advice in practice. Don't forget the name and address, Dr. David Kennedy, Roundout, N. Y. The Doctor would have it understood that, while he is engaged in the introduction of his medicine, "Favorite Remedy," he still continues the practice of his profession, but confines himself exclusively to office practice. He treats all diseases of a chronic character, and performs all the minor and capital operations of surgery.

An Anxious Capitalist in Search of a Safe Place for Investment.

"I came in to ask," began a little old man in a whisper, looking as if fearful of being overheard, and drawing his chair close up to the editor, "if you know anything of the condition of the Nevada Bank?"

"No special information," replied the editor.

"Then you think it solvent—perfectly solvent?" demanded the little man, with intense eagerness.

"Certainly."

"Might I ask what its capital is—its paid up capital?"

"Three millions, I believe," said the editor, beginning to wonder what manner of man had floated against him.

"And," continued the man in black, tugging in nervous excitement at his thin and straggling iron-gray beard, "what's the Nevada Bank's reserve—its reserve—that's what I want to find out?"

"Four millions, I think."

"And how is it invested—how is it invested?" He fairly gulped with eagerness as he glued his eyes upon those of the editor and awaited the reply:

"In United States bonds."

"Ah," he said with a great sigh of relief, "I'm glad of that. Then"—here he looked all around to make sure that there were no listeners—then you think a man could safely intrust his money to it?"

"Why, certainly. There is no safer bank in the world. It has unlimited backing."

The little old man chuckled and took the editor's hand, which he shook almost gleefully.

"You have done me a great favor, sir," he exclaimed, "a great favor—and I shall not forget it!"

"It bothers you to be sure that your money's safe, I suppose, sir?" said the editor with that respect in tone and manner which every independent citizen instinctively assumes when addressing a wealthy man.

"Well—er—no, not just yet. The fact is," he cried with a burst of confidence. "I'm about to change my manner of life. I'm fifty-five to-day and have formed a resolution that henceforth I shall save my money sinstead of spending it, as I have done from my youth up, and I have suffered considerably anxiety about where to put my money when I get it. "In point of fact," he went on, his cadaverous face beaming, "I am just now excessively hard up, and if you could oblige me, sir, with the loan of a dollar until I am started on my new career you would lay me under a heavy obligation."

The editor staggered toward the club in the corner, but when he turned he was alone.—Virginia City (Nev.) Chronicle.

An Unbeliever.

"Dar's no use ob talkin', sar," said Brother Washington, slamming his hat down on a chair in front of him. "Dis yer spirit bus'ness am all prostrus nonsense, sar."

"Well, I's not so sure 'bout dat," said Brother Johnson, tipping his chair back against the wall, and feeling around in his overcoat-pocket for a fresh chew. "I jus' tell you, chil, I has saw some queer tings in my day. Yes, sar, some queer tings."

"Go 'way, nigger," said Brother Washington. "Dar's nothin' in de unamverse what ain't 'cordin' to natura, sar. All des stories 'bout spirits am inventions ob wickid posters, sar; but da can't scar dis nigger for a cent, no sar. I's a tearalist, I am. Don't believe in nuffin' I don't see, sar. Honest, now, Mr. Jonsin, hab you ebber seen a spirit?"

"Yes, sar," said Brother Johnson.

"Mister Johnson, if I wasent a gent'll'man, I should call you a liar, said Brother Washington.

"It's berry lucky for you, Mister Washington, dat you am a gen'l'man," said Brother Johnson. "But let dat pass. Dar am such things as spirits, for I hab seen 'em, sar. Yes, an' hear 'em talk, too—"

"Look yer, nigger," said Brother Washington, gazing around him uneasily, "you needent tink you'er goin' to skare dis chil. Go an' tell dem lies to de white trash. Da is too dephafanus for educated colored pussons."

"Can't help it," said Brother Johnson, "I tell you, sar, jus' after my uncle died I seen him jus' plain's I see you now, sar. Yes, sar, dar he was at de foot ob de bed."

"Shut up," cried Brother Washington, half rising from his chair, and looking toward the door. "I say dar am no such ting as spirits, and what you see was jus' a lucamnation. Don't you try to scare 'dis nigger, sar. You jus' waste you'er time."

"Yes, an' dat am not de only spirit I ebber see," said Brother Johnson. "One time I was sitting up with a corpse, and de fus ting I knowed dar was de fellow's spirit lookin' at me from 'cross his own body."

"Stop!" cried Brother Washington, springing from his chair, and looking suddenly behind him. "Don't you tell me no more ob dem lies, 'cos I won't stand it."

"Dem ain't lies, said Brother Johnson. "What I tell you, chil, am de truf. And dar was annudder time after a nigger was murdered dat I seen de poor fellow's face all covered with blood an' a great lash—" But Brother Washington bolted through the door, and cut his friend's acquaintance for an entire week.

Worse than a Bulldog's Grip.

A barn in this city is infested with rats. A day or two since a large steel-jaw trap was set for the pests, and neatly concealed on top of a chopping-block. The same day a man was hired to "clean up things" in the barn. He did his work faithfully, and after a while, becoming weary, concluded to take a rest. Looking round, he espied the chopping-block, an inviting seat, and leisurely planted himself on it, when—snap went the trap, and the cries and yells of the innocent victim of the surprise party could be heard the length of the street. "Murder! murder! Take him off!" These and other fragmentary sentences brought the house servant to the scene but she was powerless, and further help had to be obtained to release the poor fellow from the jaws of the imaginary animal which had him. He was half frightened to death, and the services of a physician were needed to dress the painful wound.—Newburyport Herald.

Romance of Arithmetic.

The following story about Mohammed Ali and the camels is not new, but it is interesting:

A Persian died, leaving seventeen camels to be divided among his three sons in the following proportions: the eldest to have half, the second a third, and the youngest a ninth. Of course camels can't be divided into fractions, so, in despair, the brothers submitted their difficulty to Mohammed Ali.

"I'll lend you another camel to make eighteen, and now divide them yourselves." The consequence was, each brother got from one-eighth to one-half of a camel more than he was entitled to, and Ali received his camel back again; the eldest brother getting nine camels, the second six, and the third two.

Untidy Girls.

Many girls who are in the evening genuine ornaments to the parlor, tastefully dressed and "neat as a new pin," are little better than slatterns when performing domestic duties. I have no patience with this untidiness. It has always seemed to me as if Cinderella herself might have kept out of the ashes even if she was obliged to stay in the kitchen and work. To look well while about housework is worth while. A neat calico dress, short enough to clear the floor, smoothly brushed hair, a clean collar and a plentiful supply of aprons, are all within the reach of any woman, and I maintain that she will do her work better, and feel more like doing it if so prepared for it. The moral influence of dress is undoubted.

MINNEAPOLIS TWINE BINDING HARVESTER

"THE MINNEAPOLIS" has established its Superiority by

For close cutting to secure lodged and short grain.

For the best cutter bar (iron and wood combined), with sickle driven with pitman same as a mowing knife.

For a stationary Binder, not subject to awkward and clumsy old device which requires the entire Binder to be shoved back and forth to deposit bundle of straw, throwing weight on horses and on jerking the pole up under their chins.

Mr. J. F. APPLEBY, the inventor of the "Appleby Twine Binder," is superintendent of our factory, and dictates the construction of every part of our machine. He has a world wide reputation as one of the best Harvester Makers of the age. He has made the MINNEAPOLIS the most perfect Harvester in the world. Agents acknowledge its superiority, and will not sell it in preference to all others; farmers believe it has no equal and are ready to buy it. The improvements made by Mr. Appleby during the past year, belong exclusively to us, and no other parties are authorized to use them.

Twenty-three hundred of these machines were sold last season, every one giving entire satisfaction. The binder has Appleby's latest improvements. THE WALTER A. WOOD HARVESTING MACHINES

Take the Lead.

In 1853, 500 Machines were sold.
In 1881, 40,413 were sold, and
47,000 have been ordered for 1882.

But the NE PLUS ULTRA of Harvesting Machinery is the Wood Twine Binder. This machine was first put upon the market in 1880, and 4,184 machines were sold that year. In 1881, the sales swelled to 10,034, and orders for over 12,000 have already been received for 1882.

THE WOOD TWINE BINDER!

Possesses these special points of excellence:

1—It is the most perfect automatic self binder ever made.
2—It effects a positive separation of the bound from the unbound grain.
3—The sheaf is formed and compressed without any strain on the twine until the knot is tied.
4—The grain is straightened by the action of the packer as it enters the binder.
5—The automatic uniform sizing of the bundle, thus relieving the driver of the care of stopping and starting the binder.

Last year's machines proved such a perfect success that they will be built substantially the same for 1882, with such improvements in minor details as may be found necessary.

Every farmer desiring to buy a self binder should examine the Wood Twine Binder before purchasing.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

HOW SPRING TRADE OPENS AND THE PROSPECTS OF THE COMING SEASON.

An Interview with the Business Men and Manufacturers of Tecumseh, and what They Say on the Subject.

We started out last Tuesday on a tour of observation to inspect the business houses of Tecumseh and enjoy a short chat with the proprietors. The business transacted in Tecumseh during the year 1881 was unprecedented in her history. The first quarter from January to April is generally taken up in collecting outstanding bills, liquidating debts, and taking an account of stock, in short, in making good preparation for the season's business which properly opens in April.—Spring trade may be said to have now fairly begun, and as we felt a kind of newspaper inquisitiveness to know what our business prospects were, we hit upon the plan of interviewing the merchants themselves, and allowing them to tell their own story. The time spent in "going the rounds" was very agreeably as well as profitably employed, and we finished the trip with our confidence in Tecumseh's future prosperity very materially strengthened. We did not realize that the list of our active business men was so large, and we were surprised to learn the volume of trade which has been done during the past year and gratified to note the bright prospects for the future.

This query was propounded to each person interviewed: How does Spring trade open, and what are the prospects for the coming season? and also such other questions as might happen to suggest themselves. The answers received are given in detail herewith.

LILLEY, BIDWELL & CO.

The index of the business transactions in any community may be found in the business done by the banks. Judged by this standard, we can say with truth that our prospects for the future are very promising. The splendid farming section adjacent to us will always give us a good trade, while the vigorous growth of our manufacturing enterprises is a most healthy and hopeful indication. We doubt whether the business of Tecumseh, as a whole, has ever been upon a more stable foundation than at present.

KIES BROTHERS

Were happy and smiling. Our trade, said George, has exceeded our most sanguine expectations since the removal into our new quarters, and the prospects are flattering for the future. In the department of merchant tailoring especially, we have been driven to fill our orders, and have actually been compelled to decline some custom.—We are preparing for a very heavy trade this season and have no fears of being disappointed.

SLAYTON & SON.

Our trade has been so uniformly good during past years, that we have been somewhat surprised at the rush since the opening of 1882. Considering the bad roads of last winter, we are well satisfied with the spring opening. Our line of agricultural implements comprises everything a farmer needs, but we have an extra superior article in the Cassady sulky plow, and the Reed spring tooth harrow of Kalamazoo. It is almost impossible to supply the demand for these.

JOE WILSON.

Since moving into my present quarters in the Mills block, my trade has greatly exceeded its former proportions. I have been compelled to employ extra clerks and workmen. My stock is now very complete, and I am having extra large sales of the celebrated Hason & Ratelle hand-sewed boots and shoes, and the Henessy Bros. shoes. The outlook in my business was never brighter.

KENNEDY & CO.

Upon the advent of spring time and passable roads, the trade in farming implements becomes very brisk and promises to be the heaviest for several years. More especially is this the case with Harvesting Machinery, and in this class we find the Twine Binders are leading. The prospect for a very heavy crop of wheat, and the unusual scarcity of help, together with the success of our binders in the field the past season, lead us to expect a very large patronage from our farmer friends.

HECK BROTHERS

Our milling business for April is larger than ever. Will pay for wheat from $25,000 to $30,000, and yet there is wheat left. Our flour demand is larger than ever. We cannot furnish half the demands made on us, notwithstanding our increased capacity. We regard the outlook for the coming year as very encouraging, and we expect to do a much larger business than ever.

GEORGE HEESEN.

The cold weather has made the spring opening rather tardy, but from present appearances my summer's trade will be larger than usual. My stock will be larger and more complete than ever before. My goods are all bought for hard cash, and hence I can sell at the very lowest margin. Twenty-four years of experience in the clothing trade in Tecumseh—having opened my store here April 19th, 1858—shows this community has confidence in my method of business.

HEESEN BROS. & CO.

Our business continues to enjoy a healthy growth. We are selling the old style rings and ringers in the usual quantities and since the introduction of our new double-acting ringer, our sales have largely increased. This new ringer by which either large or small rings can be inserted is certain to lead all other styles in the market. We are more than satisfied with the present outlook.

WM. MCCOWEN.

I have been in the furniture trade in Tecumseh eight years on the 22d day of April. During that time I have sold goods to customers in Adrian city and in every township and village within twenty miles of here. I have the largest stock of furniture in Lenawee county and the most complete assortment, and judging from the way in which my sales are growing, I say that trade opens good, and that the season's prospects are tip-top.

A. B. COTTON

Reports having big success in clearing out last season's stock and rejoices in a really fine new stock throughout. The trade in dry goods made of silk, Mr. Cotton regards as one of the wonders of Tecumseh trade this season.

D. W. CLARK

Reports business as considerably better than last year at the same time. My trade is a steady and reliable one, as I am favored with a good lot of regular customers, but comparing business during the past three months with the same months in previous years, it exhibits a very gratifying increase.

J. A. MUNGER.

The bad roads during the winter were unfavorable for my trade, but with spring opening, trade has picked up finely. I have a larger and more complete stock this spring than ever, and can sell goods cheaper. Harnesses of all kinds, trunks and everything in the horse furnishing line are kept in stock. I intend to lead the trade in my line in Tecumseh.

E. HAUSE.

As I have recently gone into my Lunch Room it is impossible to compare my business with previous years. I can say however that the Lunch department of my business is well patronized and that my tea trade has developed beyond all expectation. I certainly have no fault to find with my trade in the past and have reason to expect a good patronage hereafter. I shall make fine teas a specialty.

M. E. CONKLIN.

It is needless to say much about the Wood harvesting machines, for the farmers all know what they are. My business has been very large during the past four years, and my sales up to this date in 1882 exceed all previous years. The Wood Twine Binder is having a big run, and northern Lenawee is a fine field in which to sell them.

THOS. ADAMSON

Has had an unprecedented trade for the last year. His stock at the present time is one of the most complete in southern Michigan. He thinks the prospects of trade for the coming year are fully as good as heretofore, and that Tecumseh can hold her own in the jewelry business with any town in Michigan.

GEO. W. MARSDEN.

My business experience for the past twelve years, five of which have been connected with the boot and shoe business exclusively, I have the pleasure to say, has been very satisfactory indeed, increasing from year to year, taking into consideration the extreme and sudden changes of stock connected with our line. The present year opens with flying colors. I present to your notice a complete line, embracing all the newest styles of the leading manufacturers in leather goods. With thanks for past favors, I hope with close attention to the wants of my customers to merit and receive a generous share of the public patronage.

J. W. WOODEN.

My business is very regular from week to week, but my weekly sales to-day, compared with a year ago, show a healthy increase. In the line of fresh fish and early vegetables my sales have increased remarkably and I carry a full supply of these at all times. I have sold the only lettuce in town thus far this spring.

SUTTON & SWAN.

Our spring trade thus far for 1882 has been surprisingly satisfactory and bids fair to continue. In view of the flattering prospect for spring trade we had secured a large, well assorted stock of seasonable goods, and have in no wise been disappointed in the result. As a feature worthy of especial notice in connection with our spring trade is the large and continually increasing trade in the Economist Oil Stoves, making it almost impossible to secure sufficient supply to satisfy the demand, which facts are quite indicative that our people appreciate a good thing when obtainable. As another evidence of an almost indispensable luxury indulged in by our citizens is the constant enquiry and demand for Alaska Refrigerators, which goes to show that the preservation of vegetables and provisions during the summer months, so that they may be placed upon the table fresh and free from taint, thereby securing health and happiness, is a matter that is receiving no inconsiderable amount of attention in our community.

STRONG & MCNAIR

Report a very satisfactory trade, cold and backward as the season is. In their manufacturing department they are crowded to their utmost capacity. In every department they carry twice as many goods as were required to meet the demand ten or twelve years ago. To give an honest equivalent for the confidence and money of their patrons is now as it ever has been the constant study and effort of this old and reliable firm. They are daily adding to their stock such goods as the advancing season demands, and say they have not been disappointed in this year's business does not show quite as good or better results than any preceding year.

GAINSLEY & CO.

This firm commenced business Sept. 15, 1881, and although among us only eight months, are already enjoying a very fine trade. They carry a very fine stock of general dry goods, a stock that the people of Tecumseh can point to with pride. The manager here, Mr. C. H. Gainsley, comes to us highly recommended as a thorough business man, having enjoyed the entire confidence of the people of Schoolcraft, Mich. and vicinity, for a quarter of a century. He aims by strict attention and honest dealing to merit the confidence of the people of Tecumseh and vicinity. We learn that Mr. Gainsley has associated with him in business, gentlemen of ample means and thorough business experience, residents of the east, giving this house every advantage to place before the people goods at the least possible cost.

WM. HAYDEN.

The gambling in wheat options at Chicago and other places has demoralized the wheat market badly and rendered milling an uncertain business this winter. My mill is in better condition however than ever before and I am grinding an immense amount of wheat, while my orders from abroad are satisfactory. With the large wheat crop in prospect, and the proper adjustment of Chicago and Liverpool prices I look for a heavy and profitable season's trade.

J. W. PATTERSON,

Dealer in drugs, medicines, wall paper, etc., says that

He thinks he takes the cake,
And don't mean to break,
While he can always make
A healthy little stake.
His friends stand by him well
For he can always sell
A little down below
The going price, you know.

L. I. BIDWELL'S

Livery business has been good for the last year, better than ever before. He has a number of new horses and rigs for their summer business, which he says will be better than any previous season. His stables are in first-class shape and any one who wishes a good turn-out will do well to call on him.

WOLCOTT, TEMPLE & CO.

Have lately added a large stock of dry lumber, and the new department of sash, doors and blinds, to their business. They say there is more building in contemplation in and around our village than ever before. Their sales in the last year have been very large, but they predict a large increase for the coming season. Samuel McClure of the firm has charge of the sash, door and blind department and their work in this line is done in the best possible manner.

J. A. EATON & CO.

Owing to different business arrangements this stock of goods will be closed out before June 1st. This will certainly be done and all persons wishing bargains in dry goods should call and purchase in season. Prints 4 cts., and all goods at cost or below if necessary to close them out.

W. H. SINK.

Our genial landlord is making improvements with the rest; fourteen new rooms are being added to his house, and when this work is completed he will have one of the best hotels in the county. Mr. Sink says the transient trade of our town is increasing every day, which makes a good showing for increase in all business lines.

W. & S. W. ANDERSON

Have the largest stock of carpets and dry goods they ever had. Their store is crowded with people at all times of day, and they predict for the coming season the largest trade ever known in their line. Call in at their splendid store and see what they are doing.

ARNOLD BROS.

Are still running a Bakery, Restaurant and Lunch Room. Fresh bread every day, cakes and cookies always on hand, and large orders filled on short notice. Their business was A No. 1 last year and still on the boom. Call on them and get a good lunch and fresh glass of lager.

JAMES LOWRY

Has a full and complete line of groceries, crockery and glass ware. Since starting in the grocery business he has been gradually building up an immense trade. He reports present prospects as exceedingly favorable. Jim has a faculty of keeping things neat and clean, and people find it a pleasure to trade with him.

S. W. TEMPLE

Has lately added to his planing mill a large building for the accommodation of his increased trade, making one of the most complete planing mills in Lenawee county. He is receiving this week a large invoice of dry lumber and predicts larger sales the coming season than heretofore. His sash, door and blind department is turning out large orders of kiln dried work each week, and any one desirous of good building material should call on him.

P. B. SWICK

Says that harness business is good. I have sold thirty-three sets of harness during the past three months, and the orders come in faster than I can fill them. I shall move next week into the store lately vacated by J. D. Sholes, and shall then replenish with a new stock and be prepared to supply all my customers' wants. My friends are requested to note my removal.

CHRIS. SCHMITT.

The proprietor of the new bakery in Lee's block is doing a nice bakery business. He started here some few months ago and his trade has been increasing ever since. He keeps a good lunch counter and accommodates the farmers and others with lunch at all hours. He also keeps a full supply of cookies and cakes of all kinds. Fresh bread every day.

J. H. SHERRARD

Says his trade has been as good for the past year, and perhaps better than ever before. His store is newly stocked with fine goods in the jewelry, stationery and book lines, and the prospects for Tecumseh trade for the coming year are very flattering.

C. A. WRIGHT & CO.

Are opening up the spring trade with an elegant line of wall papers and ceiling decorations. As the town improves, so starts the sale of paints, oils and wall paper and this season bids fair to be better than all preceding ones.

J. L. TRANN

Says that the trade in his line is unprecedented. Everyone wants first class painting and paper hanging all at once. He is doing paper decorating in many of the finest residences and is having calls for this kind of work every day. Samples of his ceiling decorations can be seen at Cullen Larned's, Stacy's and many other places.

FRANK BUMANN.

My poultry trade last fall was good, and since the roads settled this spring my receipts of butter and eggs have been increasing. My facilities for properly handling these perishable articles are so perfect that I can take care of all that comes. Cash paid for everything I buy. Let the farmers come on. The more hen's nests I can find, the happier I am.

J. D. SHOLES.

I have just moved into larger and more commodious quarters, and have added largely to my stock of horse furnishing goods. My business, even during the dull time between January and April far exceeded what it was during the same period last year. The prospects are very flattering for a prosperous trade during the coming season.

HENRY NYLAND.

My trade has enjoyed a fine increase during the past two years, and I am better prepared than ever to sell goods cheap. If you do not believe it, come and see the Ladies' Fine Kid button shoes which I am selling for $2.00. I buy my goods direct from the factory and hence give my customers the benefit of the lowest prices.

Having arrived at this point we discovered that we had cut out a larger garment than we could finish in one week. Many persons whom we called to see happened to be absent from their place of business at the time, and we were reluctantly compelled to leave out many others as we had no time to interview them. Some cards already taken are also omitted, as our available space is filled for this week. We shall therefore print a second installment of these interviews next week, and also an exhibit of the railroad business transacted at this station during the first quarter of 1882. We hope to complete the list in our next issue.

A RIPPLE of excitement passed through the village last Monday occasioned by a rumor that Harry Lee had failed. The Peoples' Bank held a chattel mortgage on the Tupper stock, and it has been turned over to the Assignee to be closed out at once. The rumor arose from that.

"TRUST our cashier," said a bank director, "why, I've absolute confidence in him. He does not belong to the church, doesn't teach a Sunday school class, isn't even a temperance man. There's a cashier you can rely on. He's a man who likes above all things to go fishing, and Sunday you will find him starting out with his pole and a bottle of whisky, and he vents his propensity for wickedness by lying about what he catches."

ALONG with the chapter of accidents that fell upon our community last Saturday, Jno. Tansley met with one that nearly cost him his life. Shortly after the fire alarm he was standing with his team near the railroad track. As the freight passed along they were obliged (?) to make considerable noise, causing his team to suddenly whirl, and upset the dray, throwing Tansley underneath, and they would have undoubtedly backed him under the moving car wheels had they not been arrested by several bystanders. John dosen't care to experience another such accident, notwithstanding he escaped uninjured.

A VAG of a cur, often seen chasing the passenger trains, sought other amusement last Saturday and made it interesting for the average small boy. J. J. The dog was finally dispatched although for a time it was a matter of uncertainty what animal or person would receive the contents of the revolver.

MY AMATEUR FARM.

FIRST WEEK.

Blessed be agriculture, if one does not have too much of it.—CHAS. DUDLEY WARNER.
The beginnings of all things are small.—CICERO.
What's well begun is half done.—HORACE.

The first day of April 1881 fell on Friday—April fool and hangman's day both rolled into one. The coincidence was not auspicious, and had I been a believer in omens, I should have discontinued my experiment before it was fairly begun. Cicero says that the beginnings of all things are small and Cicero ought to know. The life of many a noted man in history is veiled in an obscure beginning. Mayor Navin commenced his career of honor and usefulness by embezzling funds from the treasury of a Sunday school. The fact therefore that I had begun farming in a small way, and that the fates were already conspiring against me, did not drive me from the track, not at all. I was in the fix of the darkey who was digging for the woodchuck. Having leased a farm, bought teams and tools, and employed an intelligent hired man, whose family were then moving into the house, the only possible line of retreat was to go straight through and come out at the other end. Friday and Saturday were consumed in "moving in." Kind reader, did you ever "move in?" If not, take my advice and don't do it. If you have, we can sympathize with each other as partners in trouble. Of course, the right stove pipe and the wrong elbow had come together and hence insisted upon staying apart. Not a single piece of furniture would fit the place that was made for it. The leg of the parlor stove got broken in unloading. The bureau was too long for the doorway, and the top row of drawers was sawed off to admit it. The slats of the bedstead had been lost on the road, and we were obliged to replace them with old fence boards. The bottom hoop dropped off the soap barrel and the contents were impartially distributed over the kitchen crockery and the women's wearing apparel. A wheel on the baby's cab had become demoralized. The hired man's best silk tile had been converted into a spittoon; and so on to the end of the chapter.—Two days of hard work and angelic patience enabled us to get the family "settled down," although during that time, the family lived on faith and fried pork, the same being sandwiched with boiled potatoes and irrigated with skimmed milk.

After a Sabbath day's rest, I began work in earnest. The only tools I had neglected to provide were a lumber wagon and a dog. An accommodating neighbor who lived on the next block, loaned me a wagon. The hired man fortunately had a canine amongst his household furniture, which he kindly threw in without charge, on condition that I should allow a reasonable amount for the dog's board and lodging. Monday morning was ushered in with an episode. Upon going to the barn Columbus found a fine, fat sheep lying cold and stiff in death. What caused this taking off was a mystery. The measles had been prevalent in the neighborhood, and there had been an occasional case of diphtheria, but it was impossible to tell whether either of these epidemics had attacked the animal. During the solemn hour of night, with no doctor by to lend his aid, the vital spark had deserted that sheep pelt and crossed over the Styx. "Now then," said Columbus, "we must have a post mortem. This makes me feel at home. My whole life has been checkered with misfortune and I know just what to do in such emergencies. An autopsy will reveal the nature of the disease and we can prevent its spreading through the rest of the flock. The pelt can be sold for hard cash, and the carcass can be tried into soap grease. Soap is a necessary farming utensil. No farmer can keep house without soap. Why, over in Canada every farmer makes from one to three barrels o' soft soap every spring. Soap was invented by the Gauls in the third century, and the art o' soap makin' was stolen from them by the Romans. Amongst the discoveries at Pompeii were a complete soap factory and several barrels o' soft soap, equal to the best soap I ever see in Canada. Afterwards the German's learned the art of makin' hard soap too. I 'spose the best article known for the body of superfine soap is sheep's taller, and the deceased animal will furnish us enough soap grease to keep us in soap for a whole year. Look at it once. This sheep would bring in the market alive say p'raps five dollars. Now, the pelt will fetch two dollars, and the soap which you'll get from the body will be worth at least six dollars more. Net gain, three dollars." This display of arithmetic closed the discussion. I could see that Columbus understood his business. The forenoon was consumed in taking the autopsy, and in trying the carcass. Nothing unusual transpired during the remainder of the week except a runaway. The general character of the work accomplished may be gathered from my daily journal.

Monday—Columbus held an autopsy on a dead sheep. Drew two loads of saw dust for the ice and put a padlock on the ice house door. The former tenant had six hams stolen from the ice house and I deemed it prudent to secure the ice without any delay.

Tuesday—Columbus drew wood from the wood yard. I have been trying to economize on fuel since last Friday and only had one fire each day to get breakfast with, and hence was easily out.

Wednesday—Columbus had a touch of the rheumatism, and could not work outside, so he utilized his time by cleaning out the horse barn and sweeping the cobwebs from the ceiling of the carriage house.

Thursday—Columbus drew hay from the farm barn into the horse barn. Hired Carl Monahan to help. While Carl was mowing away the last load, he dropped down a hay chute into the manger. Ichabod left his wagon and ran around up stairs to rescue the boy. While reaching down to grasp Carl's hand to pull him out, he lost his foothold and down he went head first into the same manger. The team took fright at the noise and "lit out." They wheeled about, upset the wagon, took the tongue and two fore wheels with them, made a circuit of the barnyard, bolted through a half open gate and landed in the water tank. By this time the women folks had aroused the neighbors and summoned help. The team was secured and the two prisoners were released from captivity. Carl escaped without a scratch, as he went down the chute feet foremost, but Ichabod had his left thumb put out of joint and one eye was swelled shut.

Friday—Columbus only had one eye to work with to-day. He took the horses to be shod and propped up the front gate post.

Saturday—Ichabod's other eye opened to-day. He split wood and tinkered around.

Two Fires.

Last Saturday about 5:30 P. M., the fire alarm sounded and the fire proved to be in the house of Robert Cupples, on Logan st. It originated up-stairs from a lot of bedding in too close proximity to the stove pipe. Several articles of bedding and wearing apparel were burned but the damage to the house was slight.

About three o'clock Sunday afternoon people were startled by another alarm. This time it was W. Tate's house, near Hayden's cooper shop. The fire started in the kitchen, and burned through the floor and quite a space on the side of the wing. The house was insured. Both fires were extinguished without the aid of the engine, but the boys turned out promptly and everything was in readiness for business in short order.

Farewell Social and Services.

The ladies of the Presbyterian church of Tecumseh, having raised and expended about $1000 in fitting up their beautiful church parlors, threw them open to the public on last Friday evening, April 21, for a farewell social to the Rev. Wm. Grandy and family. The attendance was very large, and the occasion throughout, though shadowed by a general deep-felt regret at parting with a devoted, acceptable and beloved pastor, was a very marked and enjoyable one. During the evening, some warm friends, (through the Hon. B. L. Baxter who spoke for them,) presented to Mr. Grandy two pieces of Rogers' statuary, upon the receipt of which he responded, though wholly taken by surprise, in very feeling and appropriate terms.

On the Sabbath evening following, at the delivery of his final discourse, which was to the young people of his congregation, the Baptist church, Rev. C. E. Conley pastor, and the Methodist church, Rev. R. S. Pardington, pastor, showed him the fraternal regard and courtesy of holding no services, but attending the Presbyterian church as for a union meeting, and both pastors spoke warmly and feelingly of their high esteem for and pleasant associations with the brother so soon to leave—expressing much confidence in his continued success and usefulness, and the hope that he would also have the pleasure of finding his family restored to permanent health, according to his expectation, by this removal to his new field of labor. The house, though the largest in the place, was crowded to its full capacity, and the occasion was in every way a most memorable one.

REV. GRANDY gave his farewell sermon at the Presbyterian Church last Sunday evening. There were no services at the other churches. Mr. Grandy gave a fine discourse to a very large and sympathetic audience.

DIED.

She suffered for nearly nine months from painful disease. She was exceedingly patient and fully resigned when the change came. Her sufferings were greatly relieved by kind friends and especially by her sister Mary. She was greatly beloved by a large circle of friends and a great throng attended her funeral which was conducted by Rev. R. S. Pardington at the family residence.

MEN OF THE DAY.

JAY GOULD.

In the judgment of those competent to give an opinion, Jay Gould occupies the same position in the world of finance that Bismarck holds in the field of diplomacy. He stands solitary and alone as monarch of the financial arena, towering above all rivals and distancing all competitors by the tremendous reach of his business conceptions and the magnificent genius with which he suggests their successful conclusion. Without an immense inheritance, as in the case of Vanderbilt, to launch him into the full tide of success, he has by the force of his own genius succeeded in attaining wealth estimated to be over $100,000,000.

In his personal appearance Gould is the most inferior of all the leading railway magnates. He has the nervous, rapid motion of a counter-jumper rather than a railway king. Both front and side face are inferior, but the lower part of the latter is concealed in a heavy beard, so intensely black that it suggests artificial means. He leads a hard life, labors with intense application and is driven by the pressure of his engagements until he may be considered a mere bondman. He has no leisure, no society, no reading, no recreation, but is continually under the whip and spur of necessity.

Gould's wealth has been amassed by his extraordinary tact in keeping his own counsel. His brokers acting directly under his orders are by no means in his secrets, and while one set may be bulling stock, the other may be unloading. His plan for years has been to watch for weak stocks and when he has made a selection he forces it down by a series of well concerted attacks and then makes heavy purchases, forcing the market up as easily as he forced it down. Only a man of the highest order of genius can carry on such a system and the fact that Gould succeeds is the greatest proof of his vast natural powers.

Strangely Ignorant.

The school superintendent of Knox County, Illinois, has furnished notes from an official diary, which indicate that the applicants for teacher's certificates are strangely ignorant in some instances. The answers to questions are on file, and these are some of the edifying responses: One youth mentioned the Chicago Times and the New York World as the "educational journals" he had read, and declared that John Hancock was one of the commanders at Gettysburg. A sister of this man blessed with such a vivid imagination produced the following historical information:—"Balabo crossed the Isthmus of Suez and discovered the Pacific ocean; he named it the South Sea because it was free from storms. He was a Spanish 'enthusiasm,' looking for the fabled fountain of immortal youth." One of these Illinois historians had a rank of ninety per cent. in arithmetic.

Among the living American authors, other candidates enumerated Chaucer, Spenser, and Shakspeare. The department of American politics was represented ably by these seekers for a certificate. "Senator David Davis represents Utah and has six wives," is a specimen reply. The following reference to a national sorrow is among the answers:

"A. Lincoln diede April 19 he was berried at Spring field Ill over the Same roote in which he went to Washington. The cares were Draped in black the principil buildings ever person wore badge of mourning."

The superintendent who tells this sad tale is a woman, and her thoroughness has enriched the archives of Illinois with these and many similar contributions to knowledge. She declares that the result of her questioning has been sometimes almost "appalling," which would seem to be a moderate statement.

Taking Time by the Forelock.

At the battle of Groveton Stonewall Jackson tried an experiment which nearly frightened a Federal division out of their boots. Bars of railroad iron were cut up into foot-lengths and fired from some of his heaviest guns, and the noise these missiles made as they went sailing through the air was a sort of cross between the shriek of a woman and the bray of a mule. The Federals listened in wonder at the first few which banged through the tree-tops, and presently one of the pieces fell just in front of a Pennsylvania regiment. A captain stepped forward to inspect it, and after turning it over he rushed to his Colonel with the news:

"No!"

"They are, for a fact!"

"Captain, advance your company to that ridge and deploy, and the minute you find Jackson is getting ready to fire freight cars at us send me word. I don't propose to have my regiment mashed into the ground when it can just as well be decently exterminated in the regular way!"

Not Yet.

A curious anecdote of Emperor William of Germany is told by the Brussels National. An artist was recently commanded to paint some court ceremony, and brought the sketches to the Emperor. Instead, however, of representing the Crown Prince standing upright by his father's side, the painter had sketched him with one foot on the step of the throne where the Emperor was seated. His Majesty at once seized a pencil, scratched out the obnoxious foot, and drew it in its proper place, writing on the margin, "Not yet."

The Philosopher and the Flea.

This is the tale of the philosopher and the flea:

1. The former, having been bitten by the latter, seized and was about to dispatch his foe, when he reflected that the little insect had only acted from instinct, and was not to be blamed. Accordingly he deposited the flea on the back of a passing dog.

2. This dog was the poodle of a lady, and he was very fond of his [illegible]imal. On his return to the house he [illegible] upon her lap to caress him, and the flea embraced his opportunity to change his habitat.

3. The flea having in the course of the night engaged in active business operations, awakened the lady. Her husband was sleeping peacefully beside her, and in the silence of the chamber she heard him in his dreams whisper with an accent of ineffable tenderness a name! The name was that of her most intimate female friend!!

4. As soon as it was day, the outraged wife hurried to the house of her rival, and told the rival's husband of the big, big d——ing discovery she had made. He, being a man of decision, at once called out the destroyer of his household's peace, and ran him through.

5. The widow, when her husband was taken home to her upon the medium of a shutter, was so terribly smitten with remorse that she precipitated herself from the fourth-story window.

6. The other lady convinced her husband that he had wronged her by entertaining any suspicions as to her fidelity, and, becoming reconciled with him, seized an early opportunity of poisoning him.

7. Inasmuch as the jurors of that country had never heard of "extenuating circumstances," and the chief magistrate thought that he could put a murderer to better uses than not guillotining him, the guilty woman was duly decapitated, and the sole survivors of the tragedy were the philosopher and the flea.

What Does It.

Dr. Bock, of Leipsic, is responsible for the following note on the relation between morals and what people eat and drink: "The nervousness and peevishness of our times are chiefly attributed to tea and coffee; the digestive organs of confirmed coffee-drinkers are in a state of chronic derangement, which reacts upon the brain, producing fretful and lachrymose moods. Fine ladies addicted to strong coffee have a characteristic temper, which I might describe as a mania for acting the persecuted saint. Chocolate is neutral in its psychical effects, and is really the most harmless of our fashionable drinks. The snappish, petulant humor of the Chinese is certainly to be ascribed to their immoderate fondness for tea. Beer brutalizes, wine impassions, whisky infuriates, but eventually unmans. Alcoholic drinks combined with a flesh and fat diet subjugate the moral man, unless their influence be counteracted by violent exercise."

Why It Is So.

The reason why Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" cures complaints of the Liver, Kidneys, Bowels and Blood, is that it is compounded of the very remedies which Nature herself has provided for this purpose.—Being at first scattered through the woods and fields, Dr. K., has collected them and condensed their virtues in offers to the sick and suffering. TO GRATIFY HIS WIFE.

An Interesting Story—A Hopeless Case Cured—A Good Reason for Happiness.

which has proved a source of great trouble to me for years. Several of the most noted doctors had employed some of the most noted doctors without obtaining any permanent relief, and for a long time my case was regarded as hopeless. All who knew the circumstances said I must die. Finally my wife induced me to try a bottle of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, which she had somewhere heard of or seen advertised. Without the slightest faith in it, but solely to gratify her, I bought a bottle of a druggist in our village. I used that and two or three bottles more, and—to make a long story short—I am now as healthy a man as there is in the country.

Since then I have recommended Favorite Remedy to others whom I know to have suffered from Kidney and Liver complaints, and I assure the public that the Favorite Remedy has done its work with a similar completeness in every single instance, and I trust some other sick and discouraged mortal may hear of it and try the Favorite Remedy as I did."

There was considerable discussion on the bill providing for the sale of part of the reservation of the Omaha tribe. Mr. Beck offered a resolution of inquiry into the character and cost of publications by the census bureau. A bill was passed for the manufacture of salt in Indian Territory. When the Mississippi river improvement bill came up, arguments were made by Messrs. Vest, Harrison, and Morgan. The persistency of Mr. Hoar caused Chairman Davis to call him to order in a crowded manner. A resolution was adopted for the appointment of three senators to investigate the charges against the internal revenue officers in the Sixth district of North Carolina. An adjournment to Monday followed.

HOUSE.

APRIL 17.—In the house, Mr. Chilcott, of Colorado, took his seat. Mr. Ingalls reported a bill to declare taxable certain lands granted to the Pacific railroads. The bill introduced by Mr. Kelloggg, appropriating $5,000,000 for the improvement of the Mississippi and $1,000,000 for the Missouri, was taken up. Mr. Jonas will propose an amendment that any necessary portion of the appropriation may be expended in repairing levees to improve navigation. Mr. Garfield will urge that $15,000,000 be set aside for the Mississippi and $2,000,000 for the Missouri. After a fruitless debate, an executive session was held.

APRIL 18.—In the house Mr. O'Neill introduced a bill providing that all uncompleted railroad bridges across the Ohio river shall be Union bridges. Mr. Hiscock reported a resolution appropriating $465,000 to supply the deficiency for printing and binding. Mr. Gheather secured the passage of a bill to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea. A communication from the secretary of the interior urged the establishment of an Indian training-school on the Fort Ripley reservation in Minnesota.

APRIL 19.—In the house Messrs. Taylor and Blackburn submitted reports on the expenses attending the death of President Garfield, the majority report providing for $13,000 for Dr. Bliss, $10,000 each for Drs. Agnew and Hamilton, $10,000 each for Drs. Reyburn, Boynton, and Lincoln, and $5,000 for Steward Crump. Debate on the Utah contested election case lasted until 4 o'clock, when the previous question was ordered. An hour was accorded to Geo. Q. Cannon, who charged that Governor Murray had deprived him of his rights, and proceeded to defend the institution of polygamy. A resolution that a finer Cannon nor Campbell is entitled to a seat was adopted without division.

APRIL 20.—The house passed a bill appropriating $400,000 for a public building at Frankfort, Ky. The Mississippi contested election case was taken up, a lively debate in execution was had and a postponing action until the return of Mr. Atherton, who represents the minority. WASHINGTON NOTES.

A bond call of $20,000,000 is expected before the end of the month.

Ex-Secretary Kirkwood will probably run for congress in his old district.

R. A. Elmer, second assistant postmaster-general, will withdraw from the department at the end of the fiscal year.

The senate committee on appropriations agreed to report to the house a joint resolution appropriating $400,000 for the deficiency in the government printing office.

The house committee on private land claims has agreed to ask a suspension of the rules for the purpose of passing the bill for the relief of William McGarrahan.

The house committee on military affairs directed Col. J. R. Davis to report a bill appropriating $25,000 for a railroad from Mound City, Ill., to the Mound City cemetery.

The foreign affairs committee of the senate has striken out of the Chinese bill those sections which forbid the naturalization of Celestials and the immigration of skilled laborers.

A petition has been referred to the house committee on Indian affairs, charging that the funds intended for the education of the Indians were being used in advancing certain sectarian interests, and entering a protest.

Owing to the expostulations of prominent democrats from the eastern financial centers, there is little doubt that congress will pass a bill to permit the reorganization of three hundred national banks.

The trial of the suit in which Hallet Kilbourne obtained $100,000 damages from ex-Sergeant-at-Arms Thompson is said to have been a farce. The nominal defendant made no earnest defense, and the jury it is said, was packed.

A female crank from Connecticut arrived in the city Thursday, and was taken in charge by the police. She said she came here for the purpose of marrying the president, and then she intended to pray with him, and thus induce him to pardon Guiteau.

The motion of the defendants in the star-route cases to compel the complainants to file a bill of particulars was overruled by Judge Wylie, and the request of the counsel for Turner to withdraw the plea not guilty and enter a motion to quash was taken under advisement.

President Arthur nominated Alphonso Taft, of Ohio, to be minister to Austria; William L. Dayton, of New Jersey, to the Netherlands, and Nicholas Fish, of New York, to Belgium. John M. Francis, of New York, was named for charge d'affaires to Portugal, and Adam Badeau to be consul general to Havana.

Fitz John Porter, claiming that his acts saved the union army from disaster on the 29th of August, 1862, has made a fresh appeal to the president to remit the unexecuted portion of the sentence of the court-martial and carry into effect the recommendation of the advisory board. The matter was considered by the cabinet Friday.

The bill to place General Grant on the retired list has stirred the friends of Generals Averill and Pleasanton to insist upon the same honor. General Averill, the famous cavalry leader, is said to be in almost destitute circumstances. Senator Logan refuses to accept any additions to the Grant bill.

The president transmitted to congress a letter from the Mexican minister, proposing the definition of the boundary line from the Rio Grande to the Pacific by the erection of durable monuments. The chief magistrate suggests that, in accepting the proposal, suitable provision be made for an adequate military force on the frontier to protect surveying parties.

The Zunis have gone home excepting two, M. Wogui and a son of Pedro Pincucho, who remain with Mr. Cushing to assist in cataloguing the collection at the Smithsonian institute. Those who went carried the water taken from the ocean at Boston, and also some secured from the Potomac on their trip to Mount Vernon before they went to Boston, and also a supply of shells to be ground into meal to use in their religious ceremonies.

The president has signed the appropriation bill giving $4,500,000 for the use of the public printer. Mr. Rounds expresses himself as satisfied, and says that this sum is ample for the current fiscal year. Mr. D. Hoskins, of the Washington Critic, will be appointed foreman of the Record. C. D. Fletcher, of Centralia, Ill., is at the head of the specification room.

Chaplain G. G. Mullin, of the army, has just returned from the lower Mississippi region. He had in charge the distribution of government aid to the sufferers by the flood. He had an interview with Secretary Lincoln Saturday, and told a very affecting story of the scenes of destitution he had witnessed. He has made a report to the commissioner of commerce.

If the house is disposed, all the appropriation bills can be passed by the 15th of June, and congress can easily adjourn sine die by the 10th of June, if the members so desire. A great number of them do desire an early adjournment, for the reason that, in addition to looking after their renominations, they have, also or a good many of them, to become familiar with their districts, which have been changed by the state legislatures in redistricting. The outlook, hence, is that congress will adjourn in June.

Drs. Agnew and Hamilton are very much dissatisfied with the action of the House special committee in recommending that Dr. Bliss be paid an amount nearly double what they are to receive for their services in attending the late President Garfield. Dr. Hamilton has taken occasion to express in a pointed way, his dissent from the action of the committee, and also the opinion that the amount named for Dr. Bliss is too large and far more than his services were worth. He says he stands ready to give Congress information in regard to the services of the doctors if it is desired.

Charles H. Reed has received a letter from Scoville saying that he had withdrawn from the Guiteau case and would have nothing more to do with it. Reed will go into court this week and ask to have a day assigned to hear arguments in the motion for a new trial. He is not over-confident that a new trial will be granted or that Guiteau will be given a day longer to live than the time now fixed for his execution. He says he believes if a new trial is refused that Guiteau will break entirely down, and that it will be very doubtful whether he will live to see the day fixed for his execution.

A meeting of the sub-committee of the house judiciary committee, charged with the subject of railroad land grants, was held Thursday, and listened to the argument of Mr. Gray, of Grand Rapids, Mich., in behalf of the Northern Pacific Railroad company. Mr. Gray insisted that the grant of land to the Northern Pacific vested the lands in a corporation for the purpose of constructing a road on the land indicated in the original charter of that company. He cited authorities to show that, notwithstanding there was a reservation of right of repeal of the grant, yet from the nature of the charter and the act making the grant it became a vested right, and was therefore irrepealable, being in the nature of a contract. He held that, even if congress had the power to take those lands away from the Northern Pacific Railroad corporation now in existence, it was compelled to see that the road was constructed or should transfer the title to the lands to some corporation which would complete it. Mr. Gray spoke over an hour. The committee will hear other arguments in behalf of other Pacific railroad companies. The land grants which they are investigating embrace eleven companies and involve 133,000,000 acres.

Disease is an effect, not a cause. Its origin is within; its manifestations without. Hence, to cure the disease the cause must be removed, and in no other way can a cure ever be effected. WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY AND LIVER CURE is established on just this principal. It realizes that of all diseases arise from deranged kidneys and liver, and it strikes at once at the root of the difficulty. The elements of which it is composed act directly upon these great organs, both as a food and a restorer, and by placing them in a healthy condition, drive disease and pain from the system. For the innumerable troubles caused by unhealthy Kidneys, Liver and Urinary Organs; for the distressing Disorders of Women; for Malaria, and for physical derangements generally, this great remedy has no equal. Several good shearers, in addition to those who entered for prizes, lent a hand in this part of the business, otherwise it would have been late when the shearing was finished.

CAMBRIDGE SHEEP BREEDERS AND WOOL GROWERS ASSOCIATION.

A Good Show of Cambridge Sheep and Fair Crowd in Attendance.

Last Tuesday we took a seventeen mile drive up to C. W. Greenleaf's place in Cambridge to attend the "sheep shearing," and to see our friends and patrons in that section of the county. The Cambridge sheep rank as good as any in Lenawee or Washtenaw counties, and the Cambridge farmers are A No. 1 sheep breeders. As a class they all own good sheep, and we think more good flocks of sheep can be found in this township, taking them as a whole, than any other section. The festival was a success, but a portion of the crowd did not arrive until after dinner on account of the morning being so cold. But about two o'clock Mr. Greenleaf's spacious barns were swarming with people all talking sheep and having a good time. The sheep exhibits were on the whole better than ever before shown in this township, thus showing careful attention and good breeding.

We will give a list of exhibitors with the number of sheep, followed by a table of the shearing.

F. J. Kinney, Cambridge, 1 six yr. old ram, 2 two yr. old rams, 3 yearlings, 3 two yr. old ewes, 6 spring lambs. Mr. Kinney has a large flock of sheep and takes an active part in the sheep raising of Cambridge. He sold sixty to different parties last fall and his stock is in good condition.

Frank Sheeler, Cambridge, 1 two yr. old registered ram, "Rip Van Winkle;" 12 yearling rams, 1 two yr. old ram, 1 four yr. old ram, "Silverhorn;" 6 yearling ewes, 1 two yr. old ewe, 1 three yr. old ewe. The ram, Rip Van Winkle, was purchased of J. C. Hamilton of Bridgeport, Vt., last fall and sheared on the 26th of April, 1881, 19½ lbs. of wool, which is fair for a yearling. As to form and staple he is almost perfect, and is destined to be the leading stock ram in this section. Mr. Sheeler's stock of sheep are all registered in the Vermont register. He is making good sales all the time, and each year makes new importations from Vermont. He has sold two rams for $100 each within the past thirty days. His old ram, Silverhorn, is still on earth and is getting good lambs every year.

Orrin Short, Cambridge, 1 two yr. old ram, "Bonanza;" 12 yearling rams, 6 yearling ewes.

L. M. Sheler, Cambridge, 1 four yr. old registered ram, "Ironsides."

B. C. Howard, Rome, 1 two yr. old ram.

Warren Sager, Cambridge, 1 two yr. old ram.

W. R. Wimple, Cambridge, 4 yearling ewes, 6 yearling rams, 10 ewes with lambs, 1 four yr. old ram, 1 two yr. old ram.

"New I See!"

So said the blind man after the Savior had healed him. Actual blindness is not easy to cure, although it is sometimes done. But remember that disease of the eyes often results from impure blood. If you have any reason to think that your bad eyes may have come from this cause, lose not an hour of time in buying a bottle of Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy," which will cost you only one dollar, and take it to cleanse your blood. You can implicitly trust it to do this. Or drop a line to Dr. David Kennedy, Roundout, N. Y. State your case fully and get the Doctor's opinion free.

Snow storms were prevalent in the northern part of the State on Monday.

A Traveler's Story.

After spending months at watering places and consulting the best physicians without benefit, I returned home disheartened and expected to die. A friend urged a trial of Parker's Ginger Tonic. Three bottles and careful diet have brought me excellent health and spirits, and I hope my experience may benefit similar sufferers.—Cincinnati lady. See other column.

I

Behind a little silken mesh of lace
That hides and yet reveals I see her face;
The filmy web doth not obstruct my view,
With softened grace her beauty shineth through;
[illegible]
Her waving tresses on a brow of snow,
So many charms the little net reveals,
Can there be one I wonder it conceals?
Go, wandering out, a-longing doth possess
My very soul to tear away the veil:
So foolish! well I know her radiant face
Is all the fairer for that bit of lace.

II

Behind a winning, baffling veil of jealousy
Intangible yet real, her heart doth hide!
The subtle veil no single grace doth mar;
Her truth and love shine through, yet doth it bar
My too audacious eyes; though many a day
I fain would tear the torturing thing away
And see her soul, I will be wise; who knows?
The bud hath beauty that the rose
Hath lost forever, and there is no room
For sweet conjecture [illegible]
Maybe I love her more for that sweet pride,
Behind whose strength her loving heart doth hide.

FALSE OR TRUE.

BY ROBERTA EARLE.

"Only a home; I ask nothing more, Miss Burton; but I must have a home, or die. I will be maid, seamstress, anything you wish, for a home."

Miss Burton's beautiful brown eyes had never left the speaker's face; for twenty years she had steeled her heart against all pertaining to this girl, and yet now she found it hard to withstand those lovely, pleading eyes.

"If you take me, Miss Burton," continued the sad young voice, "I will serve you so gladly. I have battled for myself two years, ever since poor papa died, and now I could wish to die myself."

"Hush, girl! No one dares to wish that. You know my story, Jeannette Moore, mine, your father's and your mother's, and you cannot wonder that, although I will keep you, I expect only ingratitude."

"I thank you," said Jeannette Moore, slowly. "Perhaps sometime I can prove that I am not ungrateful."

Miss Burton waved her white hand, commanding silence; then she rang a bell, and said to the maid who answered it,—

"Open Miss Florence's room and have it arranged, for Miss Moore will occupy it henceforth."

When Jeannette Burton was sixteen, (she was almost thirty-seven now,) she was a vision of beauty seldom seen; those calm, powerful brown eyes and classical features made her pre-eminently glorious. They had called her "Gloria" in those days, but now it was only Miss Jeannette, or Miss Burton.

The family had then consisted of Mr. Burton, his son Roy, and Gloria, beside Florence, the child of his only brother. Florence Burton was not beautiful, but she was a thousand times more attractive than stately Gloria, and Roy was madly in love with her; so much so that Mr. Burton reluctantly consented to their engagement when Roy was eighteen, and his cousin two years younger.

Gloria had been promised to Harry Moore, a handsome young artist, as aristocratic as he was poor, ever since her childhood. On her seventeenth birthday she was to be married, and great preparations were made for the wedding. One week before the time Florence started for the village with Harry Moore, to make some trifling purchase for the bride, and never returned. The next morning word came that they were married.

The shock killed Mr. Burton, and sent Roy, the gay, care-free Roy of old, away from the loved home of his childhood, where he might forget Florence's perfidy. But Jeannette Burton reigned calmly on at Burton Hill.

Only a year after the runaway bride died, leaving a tender baby girl, whose name she asked might be Jeannette, for the girl they had wronged.

Jeanie Moore was happy indeed until her father died and left her penniless; but she took up the burden bravely, and worked for her bread with all her might. She struggled for two years, and then, worn out and disheartened, applied to Miss Burton for aid. I think even then the lady would have refused her request but for the girl's eloquent, violet eyes, so like Florence Burton's; those she could not resist.

Yes, Jeanie Moore was fair and fascinating with diamond-like eyes, like the Florence of long ago; but whether she, too, were false, only time would tell. She was at least true to her word; she asked only a home, and she had gotten it. She secured pupils, and gave lessons in drawing and painting, and soon won her tiny share of fame. She became a general favorite, too, for she had a pleasant word or a smiling glance from those wonderful violet eyes for every one.

She took a deep interest in Burton Hill, where she found so many mementoes of her dead, reverenced mother. In the art gallery, seldom entered now, hung that mother's picture, away from the rest of the Burton's, of whose faces Roy's pleased Jeanie best. There was something in the brilliant, proud, and yet kindly brown eyes that made her pity him. He had loved her mother, and she (Jeanie always sighed here) had betrayed his love.

The old wound in Jeannette Burton's heart had healed, and Harry was utterly forgotten in the deep, womanly love which, in her maturer years, she gave to Capt. Wittmore. He, a grave man of forty, loved her as a man only once loves, and his heart warmed as he read her letter, asking him to come to Burton Hill, and telling him of its new inmate, Jeanie Moore; and yet he shivered.

When he met the girl he seemed nervous, and his face paled as he looked into the bright eyes and took one little hand.

"So you are Jeanie Moore," he said.

"Yes."

Jeanie faltered, with flushed cheeks and downcast eyes, which did not escape Miss Burton's notice.

"There are some views that arrived from Scotland, Laurence,"

"If you will come into [illegible] you can see them in a [illegible]

Roy Burton's eyes would look lovely sad, and I must try it. But why did he come here? I thought he meant to stay in France, where he was when we knew him. Well it cannot matter."

But she found it did matter, when it was too late. Capt. Wittmore watched Jeanie more than half the time, and talked to her, it seemed, the other half. Miss Burton grew anxious. Had not Florence taken Harry from her? Was it just for her child to win Laurence Wittmore? No, no! Heaven was unkind to her.

It was a dark, stormy night in November, the third month of Jeanie's stay at Burton Hill. They had been sitting in the library, Jeanie apart from the others, painting on a head of the watch-dog, Hero, and Capt. Wittmore and Miss Burton talking easily, and a little confidentially, until the latter was called away.

When she returned, some fifteen minutes later, she found the captain bending over Jeanie, who had risen, both of her hands clasped in his.

"Jeanie, you will never tell her," he was saying, and Miss Burton stopped.

"No, I will be true to you," was the answer bravely given. "And she, dear, good Miss Burton, will never, never know."

"She does know!" exclaimed the listener, entering with a square piece of canvas in her hands. "You are false, too, Jeannette Moore! False as Florence herself! And now I ask you to explain this."

She turned the canvas toward them, and disclosed a picture; a scene familiar to them all, the lawn at Burton Hill, and three figures there—Miss Jeannette's father, with a paper in his hands, his head bowed with grief—she herself kneeling with her piteous face lifted to the sky—while Roy stood at a distance, calm and white, with a terrible agony in his brown eyes. This was Jeanie's idea of how they had looked on that dreadful morning, twenty years before, and she had written, in tender, girlish pity, the name, "Gloria's Desertion" in one corner.

"You painted it?"

"Yes," Jeanie found voice to reply.

"You are false to me, to all! Now take this vile thing and leave my house! You are to wait for nothing—go immediately! Will you stand aside, Laurence?"

She seized the shivering form, led her to the door, and put her outside. Capt. Wittmore followed her.

"You are mad, Jeannette," he exclaimed, as the door closed on poor Jeanie. "Let me explain. I—"

"You will not say a word!" The brown eyes looked their defiance. "Neither will you follow her until morning. I command it, and I will see that my commands are enforced!"

* * * * * * *

The morning broke clear. Jeannette Burton stood at the low window in the library, her sunken eyes turned without, where a figure toiled its way to the gate of Burton Hill. It was a man, tall and majestic, whose eyes never left the limp, helpless figure he held.

Miss Burton threw open the window as he approached.

"She cannot be brought here!" cried she.

He lifted a pair of dark, stern eyes to her face, and stepped over the casement with his burden, which he placed upon the lounge by the grate. Poor Jeanie was wet through, and utterly unconscious. Her lashes rested upon her white cheeks, and her long, soft hair fell like a veil half over them.

"You are Jeannette Burton?" the stranger asked abruptly.

"I am."

"And she is—"

"Jeannette Moore."

"Florence Burton's daughter?"

"Yes."

"I thought so; I recognized the picture. It is sadly defaced. Do you know what it is?"

He held up Jeanie's picture, all wet and soiled.

"I do. But who are you?"

"I am Robert Burton, the Roy of this." He pointed to the canvas.

"My brother!" Miss Jeannette cried. Jeanie stirred and lifted her violet eyes.

"I meant no harm, Miss Burton," she said faintly. "His eyes were so beautiful, and I wanted to see how they would look sorrowful. So I painted it, and then I put in the others, you and Mr. Burton. Please forgive me."

Miss Burton left the room and returned with Capt. Wittmore, who looked with frightened eyes at Jeanie.

"Jeannette," he said huskily, turning toward her, "you must hear me now, for her sake, whether you will or not. I wanted her to keep my secret. Five years ago I was a gambler—no inoffensive player, but a desperate gambler, with no higher employment. They saved me, Harry Moore and his gentle, violet-eyed child. I loved you, Jeannette, and I did not want you to know. Poor little Jeanie, she kept my secret well."

"Thanks," whispered the girl, feebly, and fainted dead away.

She had not been false, after all, but she had paid for her truth almost with her life.

When at last she recovered, there was a quiet wedding at the Hill, and "Gloria," (everybody called her that now,) took her away with the captain and herself to their own home. After a little while Jeanie went back to Burton Hill with Roy, as his wife.

"Jeanie, the true," Roy calls her laughingly, sometimes, and then, with a tender clasp of the slender form, he assures her that the child has atoned a thousand times for all the pain the mother caused him.

Sacramento Record-Union: For nine years a Sacramento mayor failed to pay the interest on the city debt. A member of a banking firm in this city, taking advantage of the depreciation caused by the failure to pay interest, bought $146,000 of city bonds at 18 cents on the dollar. The mayor, on some pretext, cashed $35,000 of bonds belonging to himself out of the treasury, and the banker sold his bonds in Germany at 56 cents on the dollar. The net result of the failure to pay the interest: $28,000 profit to the mayor, $55,000 profit to the banker, and an increase of $600,000 city debt.

Romance on Shipboard.

Every ship has its romance. You feel that your fellow-passengers are bound to contribute to your entertainment and amusement, and therefore you have no scruples or compunctions at watching any love making going on. Who was to blame when, sitting idly on the deck, one night, we heard above the noise of the screw this deliciously frank avowal, made by a young German to an American girl, possessed, possibly, of fascinations, rather than positive beauty? "Mein Liebling, I thought me never I could lofe one madchen who is not beautiful; but I lofe you." Is it so they make love in the vaterland?

But coming home we had a genuine romance on board. Among the passengers was a demure little German maiden, a veritable Gretchen, with her blonde tresses a la Marguerite. She knew not a word of English, and was with her aunt, also a German, but whose home was in America. This aunt, growing confidential, told us soon after starting, that she was bringing her niece to America for a year, at the request of her parents, who wished her to forget a lover upon whom her heart was set, but of whom they did not approve because of his lack of wealth and title. The aunt had never seen this lover, and could not describe him to us; but she evidently meant to do her duty and fulfill her trust. Now, this maiden, with her firm little mouth, reserved and silent, did not look as wretched as she ought to have done under such circumstances; but we concluded it was because of her nationality. She had our sympathy.

There was a man, tall and stern and scholarly, among us, whose English was broken, and who showed little disposition to be social, till on the third day, when, the purgatory of the mal de mer being safely through, he begged the aunt to present him to the little Fraulein. This she did readily, and the acquaintance ripened into an intimacy. This pleased the aunt, who confided again in us, and said that she was happy that her charge was willing to be entertained, and was so rapidly forgetting the old love. That couple took possession of the cosiest places day and evening; and if you approached too near you heard him reading aloud (always from the same page), and she demurely listening. When we reached New York the tall man took the wee blonde maiden by the hand and led her to her aunt, and said: "I am ———, the lover from whom you fled, and from whom nobody can take the Fraulein he loves. And now, Gnadige Frau, we will all three drive directly to a Lutheran clergyman." And they did—the poor aunt looking so helpless, the demure Gretchen, with fresh ribbons in her hair, and the man whose will was law to those two women. May fortune smile on them all!

The Barber.

Outline Sketch of a Professional Career.

The barber, children, is of an extinct species. The hair-dresser and tonsorial artist of the present day are supposed, however, to be descendants of the barber in direct line.

The barber is a treacherous creature. He is never to be depended upon. He has been known to cut his best friends.

He is remarkably sharp in a business transaction, and he will shave you if you give him a chance. In fact, shaving may be said to be his business.

The barber is a strapping fellow, and is ever ready to razor row. I have frequently seen him take a man by the nose without the least provocation.

He has his shortcom(b)ings, to be sure, and is apt to stir up your dander; but he has a very smooth tongue, and knows how to lay on the lather.

He is generally honest in his judgments, and sincere in pooh-poohing shams and delusions; but at the same time he is given to a great deal of shampooing.

I can't say that he was ever charged with murder, but thousands of people dye in his shop yearly.

Formerly the barber was a surgeon also, and used to be paid for bleeding his customers. Nowadays he draws blood without extra charge.

The barber sees a great many affecting scenes. There is a good deal of parting going on every day in his shop.

The barber seldom uses nails when shingling, though he may use them when he comes to the scratch.

The barber is a very secretive fellow. You will find locks everywhere about his place.

He has little recreation. Curling is his chief amusement.

He always stands well in his profession. You will generally find him at the head.

He never makes game of his work, unless hair-dressing may be considered a rare bit of pleasantry.

The barber has to stand a great deal from his customers. He does not care, however, how much cheek they display in his establishment, and the more chin they give him the better he likes it.

The barber's wife goes shopping, just like other women, though she ought to be able to get hirsuite at her husband's establishment. She probably prefers to whisker round elsewhere.

Though the barber may have no children to receive his inheritance, there are always many hairs apparent at his shop.

There are many more things I might tell you of the barber, but he is a great conversationalist and amply able to speak for himself.—Boston Transcript.

The overdoing of the modern æsthetic business is illustrated in an exchange by these incoherent words: "Bridget, why hast thou to me so well recommended by Mrs. Bongtongs not as I bid thee these many times conformed to wishes of mine expressed in this respect forsooth that though time beyond laundry day is by two days extended, yet thee no sprinkle to the articles hath given, nor doth to me anywhere upon the range appear the sad iron which ere this in times that were to and fro to glide was wont. Peradventure—" "Well, mum, in a Quaker family working was I once, but long enough not I the language to learn; an' if in a furren 'tongue ye spakin' be, it's to me intirely unbeknowest.'"

A Very Dignified Young Actress.

A writer in the London Sporting and Dramatic News gives an account of an amusing episode which happened some time since in the green-room of one of the leading provincial theatres. His friend Elpool is the manager, and he had given an engagement to a certain Miss Hortie, a lady who was half way between an amateur and a professional actress. Miss Hortie, who had a very high opinion of her dignity, was cast for a short but very important part in a certain drama. The villian, in the final act, was having it all his own way, and was declaring triumphantly, "But such testimony can never be forthcoming!" when Miss Hortie, the only person who could set things right, and who was supposed to be dead, had to enter quietly and say, "You are mistaken!"

On this, of course, the whole effect of the scene depended, and when Elpool went to the wing to see if Miss Hortie was in her place ready to go on, that lady was nowhere to be seen. He rushed about in despair and bolted into the green-room, where the lady was quietly sitting down, doing some extraordinarily "high class" embroidery.

"Now, my dear," cried Elpool, "your scene's on. For goodness sake don't miss your cue!"

The lady rose with much dignity and began:

"Mr. Elpool, I beg to state—"

"Yes, yes my dear; but tell me about it afterward. What is it? Nothing wrong, I hope? We'll see about it; but do go on."

"Mr. Elpool, I wish to say that I—"

"But, my dear, your cue will be given in a second, and the scene ruined! Why don't you go on?" cried poor Elpool, stamping in an air of excitement.

Just then in rushed one of the other actors.

"Your cue's past, and the stage is waiting!" he cried, while the unhappy Elpool sank into a chair dumbfounded. Only the lady herself was calm.

"Mr. Elpool," she began once more, "when I accepted an engagement in your theatre, I had no notion that you would presume to take the liberty of calling me 'my dear,' and I beg that so great a violation of propriety may not be permitted to occur again!"

Longfellow's Finest Sonnet.

"As a fond mother, when the day is o'er,
Leads by the hand her little child to bed,
Half willing, half reluctant to be led,
And leaves his broken playthings on the floor,
Still gazing at them through the open door,
Nor wholly reassured and comforted
By promises or others in their stead,
Which, though more splendid, may not please him more;
So Nature deals with us, and takes away
Our playthings one by one, and by the hand
Leads us to rest so gently that we go
Scarce knowing if we wish to go or stay,
Being too-full of sleep to understand
How far the unknown transcends the what we know."

A Word of Caution.

As is usually the case where an article of true merit has attained a world wide reputation by its wonderful results, as the celebrated Electric Bitters have done, certain unprincipled parties have endeavored to imitate them, and expect to induce an unsuspecting public to purchase their faaudulent wares. Wonderful Surgical Operation—Removal of Urinary Stones from the Bladder—Successful.

Mr. Simeon Tistell, of Sangerties, N. Y., had been treated for seven years by various physicians for what they call Stricture of the Urethra, without benefit. He finally consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Roundout, N. Y., who found his trouble to be Urinary Calculi or Stones in the Bladder. The doctor at once removed the foreign bodies with the knife and then gave his great Blood Specific "Favorite Remedy," to prevent their reformation. The entire treatment was eminently successful, and Mr. Tistell's recovery was rapid and perfect.

While "Favorite Remedy" is a specific in all Kidney and Bladder diseases, it is equally valuable in cases of Billious Disorders, Constipation of the Bowels, and all the class of ills apparently inseparable from the constitutions of women. Try it. Your druggist has it, and its cost is only one dollar a bottle. The lucky man is he who puts this advice in practice. Don't forget the name and address, Dr. David Kennedy, Roundout, N. Y. The Doctor would have it understood that, while he is engaged in the introduction of his medicine, "Favorite Remedy," he still continues the practice of his profession, but confines himself exclusively to office practice. He treats all diseases of a chronic character, and performs all the minor and capital operations of surgery.

Since Parisians learned the merits of horseflesh as an article of food during the siege, hippophagy has made steady progress in the French capital. In 1875 the butchers disposed of 7,000 horses, in 1880 of 9,000 and in 1881 of 9,300. Last year the supply of meat was further increased by the carcasses of 400 asses and mules.

Nine massive Norman coffins have been discovered under the floor of the chapter-house of Bristol Cathedral. The sculpture upon the covers of some of them, although very old and somewhat rude, is exceedingly interesting. One of these covers, which is said to be at least 700 years old, has been carefully preserved and now stands in the vestry.

Mrs. Ponsonby de Tomkyns:—"That lady was evidently intended by nature for a Chinese, Sir Charles! I wonder who she can be?" Sir Charles:—"She happens to be my sister. May I ask you why you think nature intended her for a Chinese?" Mrs. de Tomkyns (equal to the emergency)—"She struck me as having such exquisitely small feet!"—Punch.

One of the Zuni Indian Chiefs from New Mexico, in an address in Boston, showed an amazing appreciation of the merits of his hosts. "I am happy to look upon the American people," he said, "for they smile on me, which shows the goodness of their hearts. We regard the Americans as great gods—as we do the sun. They are like our animal gods. However wonderful and precious they are, they show by their kind looks that they have room for us in their hearts."

A writer in the Rochester Express says that he has heard a "young woman of respectable parents" in that city remark to her sister at night: "Let us go out and see if we can find some fool who will buy us the oysters." According to the same paper's showing, it is a common thing for highly-educated Rochester girls to be dragged out of saloons in a state of beastly intoxication.

It is said that Henry M. Stanley, the African explorer, when on the staff of the Omaha Herald, a dozen years ago, was rejected by a bewitching little actress then known as Annie Ward. She married an actor named Baker, and four years afterward committed suicide at St. Louis, driven to desperation by the neglect and desertion of the man she had chosen in preference to the explorer.

A Munich painter, who was formerly a blacksmith, has recently produced a picture which has stirred the whole town. He exhibited it in a miserable little back room of a place, but it has been visited by throngs of people, many of them distinguished. He has fixed his price for the work at 100,000 marks, and by a Paris dealer has been already offered 80,000 marks. The artist's name is Leibl. His picture represents the interior of a village church.

Cazenova will send a humorous little picture to the Paris Salon this season, representing the interior of a barber's shop in Spain. The barber has just lathered the face of a customer who has come to get shaved, when a pretty girl enters the shop. The gallant barber has deserted his unfortunate client to wait on this fair new comer. Meanwhile the poor man in the back-ground holds up the basin beneath his well-soaped chin, and looks anything but comfortable and happy.

Mrs. "Member's" appeal to her long-delaying husband:

Husband, dear husband, come home to me now,

When will you get through with bills and resolves,
Stop talking of license and rum,
Of railroads and bridges and other such things,
And tend to your business at home?

Hail, Gentle Spring.

A Wife's Portmonnaie.

When Pat was asked why he was thinking of getting married, he answered: he could almost support himself, and it would be a poor woman that could not do a little toward it. Many a man besides Pat has been married for the same reason, but has not been honest enough to own it. No doubt Kathleen will be much happier with her honest husband than she would if he has made her believe he was worth his weight in money. What if she does have to go out to work, doing other people's drudgery. She will have the pleasure of receiving pay for it, and that will be more than some of her more favored sisters do. I have known a woman to do the same amount of work in a year that her neighbor across the way hired done at $3 per week, besides caring for a large family of children. And what wages did she get? Just enough to keep her from freezing, and not a glove or collar ever found its way to her wardrobe.—And yet her husband was just as well off as her neighbor; "but," said he, "I never allow my money to slip through my fingers without knowing what it goes for." When there was anything needed in the house he got it, and if his wife was not suited whose fault was it? He said that Cheap Johnny was his patron saint, and he was too short-sighted to see that the best was the cheapest; too bigoted to believe that his wife's judgment was better than his in any such matters. I never knew her to have a dollar she could call her own.

Talk to him about letting his wife handle a share of the profits of the farm, he would tell you that women don't know how to use money. If they don't, its for the same reason that the slaves did not know how to use their freedom when first emancipated. It was because they never had it to use.

I have no doubt but that many farmers who read this have been in the habit of dividing the money received from the proceeds of their united labor, but there are hundreds who cram the well-filled pocketbook down into the deepest pocket with a self-satisfied air that seems to say plainer than words: "Its all mine," and long before all the plans he has been forming for its use are carried out, the poor pocketbook looks as though an elephant had stepped on it.

Brother, try a new plan. Let your wife help invest that money.—Kansas Agriculturist.

Mr. J. F. APPLEBY, the inventor of the "Appleby Twine Binder," is superintendent of our factory, and dictates the construction of every part of our machine. He has a world wide reputation as one of the best mechanics of the age. He has made the MINNEAPOLIS the most perfect Harvester and Binder of the age. Agents acknowledge its superiority, and use it to sell if in preference to all others; farmers believe it has no equal and are ready to buy it. The improvements made by Mr. Appleby during the past year, belong exclusively to us and no other parties are authorized to use them.

Twenty-three hundred of these machines were sold last season, every one giving entire satisfaction. The binder has Appleby's latest improvements. THE WALTER A. WOOD HARVESTING MACHINES

Take the Lead.

In 1853, 500 Machines were sold.
In 1881, 40,413 were sold, and
47,000 have been ordered for 1882.

But the NE PLUS ULTRA of Harvesting Machinery is the Wood Twine Binder. This machine was first put upon the market in 1880, and 4,184 machines were sold that year. In 1881, the sales swelled to 10,034, and orders for over 12,000 have already been received for 1882.

THE WOOD TWINE BINDER!

Possesses these special points of excellence:

1—It is the most perfect automatic self binder ever made.
2—It effects a positive separation of the bound from the unbound grain.
3—The sheaf is formed and compressed without any strain on the twine until the knot is tied.
4—The grain is straightened by the action of the packer as it enters the binder.
5—The automatic uniform sizing of the bundle, thus relieving the driver of the care of stopping and starting the binder.

Last year's machines proved such a perfect success that they will be built substantially the same for 1882, with such improvements in minor details as may be found necessary.

Every farmer desiring to buy a self binder should examine the Wood Twine Binder before purchasing.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

CONTINUATION AND CONCLUSION OF THE INTERVIEWS OF LAST WEEK.

Everyone Seems Satisfied with the Prospects for the Coming Season—Some Shipping Statistics.

We present to-day the conclusion of our interviews with the business men of Tecumseh. Our last week's list and this one combined make a most gratifying exhibit, and show that Tecumseh is keeping pace with the progress of the times. The shipping statistics for the first quarter of 1882 compare favorably with the like period in former years, while the shipment of flour during the month of April last past was the heaviest that has been recorded in many months.—The first man called on for his opinion was

HENRY MCCLURE

Who was found waiting on customers as usual. He has a very large stock of groceries and supplies of all kinds and defies competition in prices. He makes a specialty of teas and coffees and is second to none in crockery and glassware. He is now provided with a cashier and bookkeeper, and gives his own personal attention to selling goods.

E. V. DE PUY

Is on the road most of the time selling agricultural implements. We caught him a moment early in the morning and he dismissed us with the remark: "My business was never better. I am on the war path now with the McCormick Twine Binder and they are going off like hot cakes everywhere. Come around next August and I will give you full particulars."

H. BREWER & CO.

Were so busy that they had no time to be interviewed, "But," says A. L. Brewer, "you may state that we are at present running a force of between 30 and 40 hands, and that our business as a whole was never more satisfactory. We are sending out more tile and brick machines than ever, and we have a large amount of work in other directions. We expect a heavy summer's trade.

HENRY SMITH.

I am running my paper mill with two sets of hands, running both night and day, and turning out better and more straw paper than I have ever made before. Owing to competition the paper business is somewhat uncertain at times, but I am doing lots of work, and I consider the outlook for the summer as very favorable.

J. H. EMERY.

Business is good. I have my full share of transient custom, and also a fine lot of regular boarders, about twenty-five in number at the present time. My table is first-class and prices are at the bottom figures. I have excellent stabling for farmers and enjoy a heavy run of business in this line. The outlook for the summer is good.

DR. E. F. STEINHOFF.

I have no reason to complain about my business prospects for I have all I can properly attend to. My custom is regular and of a good character, but comparing my business now with what it was in former years, it shows a healthy increase. People need new teeth and must have their old ones repaired, and every one knows that my facilities for doing dental work are tip-top and that my charges are reasonable.

A. J. PALMER

Is running his chair factory as usual. He also keeps on hand in addition to a full line of chairs of his own manufacture, good substantial furniture of ordinary grade. Purchasers have a chance of saving a jobber's profit by buying of him, as the goods go from the manufacturer directly to the buyer. He intends to enlarge and increase his business this season and feels satisfied with the present outlook.

H. E. ANDERSON

Says: "I am here for business. If they beat me they will have to get up before four o'clock in the morning.—The reputation of this store under the management of the Brewer Brothers shall be fully sustained while I remain at the helm. If a large line of goods, reasonable prices and gentlemanly clerks will bring in trade, then I confidently expect to get my share of the public patronage.

WM. DE MOTT.

Was found writing insurance policies. His fire insurance is gradually growing in volume, as he controls a large line of first-class companies.—But he is devoting special attention to the Northwestern Mutual Life, and seems well pleased with the extensive and growing business he has placed on his books for this sterling company. He established his Life and Fire Agency here in 1869, and since that date he has paid about $12,000 in fire losses, and $25,000 in life insurance claims for the Northwestern Mutual Life of Milwaukee, of which company he has been district agent since 1868. The life business of that company has been gradually increasing and growing until it now requires most of his time to attend to that department.

J. R. HALEY.

I am having my hands full of business at present. My facilities for making first-class buggies of all styles and platform spring wagons at low figures are better than ever. I do not deal in shoddy stock. I have also a large amount of ordered work and am now finishing up some buggies for Detroit buyers. The prospects for a healthy summer trade were never better with me.

ED. ROWLAND.

"Well, yes," said Ed, "if you want any blacksmithing done call on me. I run several hands and my shop is full from morning till night. I sell the best wheel spring-toothed harrow made, and I am agent for the St. Paul cord binder. My three horse and double whiffletrees are scatte red among the farmers all through this section of the county."

I. B. RICHART.

I am still holding forth at the old stand, on Logan street, and my business this spring is very promising. I make a specialty of wagon and carriage repairing in all its branches, and am having a heavy run on the Williams patent hay and stock racks, as I am the only person in Tecumseh who makes these racks. I am bothered to fill my orders in season to satisfy my customers.

ALVA M. WARING.

Is still making new brooms that sweep clean. His trade is gradually increasing and the prospects are good. He intends to put in twelve acres of broom corn this season for his own use on the prairie in Ridgeway, so that he will not be troubled about procuring stock. With a good crop there he can place more brooms on the market next fall and winter than ever before.

NATIONAL R. & A. ASSOCIATION.

The National Relief and Accident Association has now got nicely established, and bids fair to become one of the permanent institutions of Tecumseh. Although only five months old, having issued their first policies in December last, the company has a large list of members on its books, has several active local agents in the field, and is adding to its membership daily. The admirable features of this company attract attention whenever they become known and hence it is an easy company for agents to work for. At the same time their care in taking sound lives—as they exact as rigid an examination as the old stock companies require—renders the institution a safe one. Out of several hundred members the company has not met with a single loss yet. Dr. House and Mr. Kneale, with whom we had our interview, are exceedingly sanguine of a prosperous future for the company.

MRS. M. A. FREEMAN.

Since my removal to the rooms west of the People's Bank, on the ground floor, I have added largely to my stock of millinery goods, which is now the most complete I have ever carried. The Chadwick sisters have their dressmaking rooms in connection with my store.

WOOLSTON COMFORT.

I am running my mill night and day full blast and am so busy that I have no time to blow. In fact, it is not necessary. The fame of Comfort's Roller flour has gone out over the land. Farmers come twenty miles to get Comfort's flour. I exchanged flour last month for 1900 bushels of wheat. Put this on thy note book and go thy way in peace.

THOS. RYLE.

What are my prospects, did you ask? Well, one word will answer that question. They are good. I have succeeded in paddling my our canoe, beyond my most sanguine expectations, and I have a good lot of regular customers. My three-horse whiffletrees and farm harrows are giving excellent satisfaction everywhere. Horseshoeing is my forte, and I am doing the work of some of the best horsemen in town.

A. ANDERSON.

I have been engaged in my present grocery business about nine years, and have been a business resident of Tecumseh for thirty-four years. During that entire period I do not think I have seen a better outlook for all legitimate branches of trade when prudently conducted. My trade is better than ever this spring, and my stock of groceries is very complete, which I can sell at bottom figures, as I buy for cash.

THOS. ELLIOTT.

I have taken a new departure and now run my business "all alone by myself." I have a splendid new shop, with all the modern conveniences. In addition to my general line of blacksmithing and horseshoing, I am having a big run on Scotch harrows and three-horse whiffletrees.—Business was never better than now on Pearl street.

C. H. HOGKINS.

I am taking photographs and painting portraits at the old quarters on Chicago street. During hard times people economize on pictures, but with the return of the business boom, my business shows a gratifying increase. I make a specialty of large size oil and India ink portraits, and some of my latest efforts in this direction have given splendid satisfaction, among which I would mention portraits of Jas. A. Stacy and the children of J. L. Remington. I am now at work upon similar portraits of the late Butler Holloway, of Raisin, and J. P. Silvers, of Clinton. I can say that the outlook in my business was never better than this spring.

S. F. MARSTELLAR.

My Tecumseh shop was started the first day of October last, and I am well pleased with the trade I have secured during the time. I am securing a fine line of custom and putting up some extra good monuments in Tecumseh and the adjoining towns. Judging from the business I have already been favored with I flatter myself that the citizens of Tecumseh appreciate my efforts to give them good monumental work at reasonable prices. My shop is in charge of F. L. Gray, who will attend to all customers in my absence.

LORREN VAN ANTWERP.

I started my harness shop two weeks ago last Monday and moved to my present location—Swick's old stand on railroad street—on Tuesday last. I am well satisfied with the way business opens up, and invite my friends to call whenever they wish good work done at bottom prices. I shall soon stock up with a good line of general horse furnishing goods and I hope to please all who may favor me with their patronage.

A. VAN ANTWERP.

"Business is good in this shop, sir, and I am doing more work than ever before. I have a good run of work in ironing wagons, carriages, sleighs, &c. Everything in the blacksmithing line is done in good order and all work warranted.

MRS. H. E. STOUT.

My business is flourishing, as it invariably does. The spring trade in millinery goods opens auspiciously, and my stock is one in which the lady of most fastidious taste can find something to exactly suit her. I keep a large assortment of trimmed hats, and French chip hats in all colors. Also, a fine assortment of tips, feathers and flowers. And I make better prices this spring than ever before. Ladies, call and see me.

F. J. LANDGRAF.

Sewing Machines. Landgraf has for years past been the leading sewing machine man of Southern Michigan, having been established here for the past 13 years. Every one with whom he has had dealing has freely acknowledged his fair and upright way of doing business, and every day helps to make his business easy by their kind recommendations to their friends. This is as it should be. Merit should win. Those whom he cannot please must necessarily be few, as he has the following machines always in stock: Domestic, White, Wheeler & Wilson, New Home, Singer, Howe, American, Crown, Victor, and many others. You can buy a Machine at any price, from $10 upwards, and get a warrant from any agent that is perfectly responsible. All repairing attended to promptly

J. W. COLE.

My business is good, of course. It always is. I have been fortunate in securing a regular paying trade, and as the town grows, I get my full share of the increase in custom. In addition to all kinds of fresh meats, I keep on hand in their season, fresh fish, smoked ham and early garden truck. People will find me in the old corner store, always ready to supply their wants in my line.

DR. H. L. STEWART.

I am so firmly established here in my dental practice, that it seems almost superfluous to refer to it. My work is the best recommend I can have, and that has enabled me to build up an extensive practice, which I hold without any effort. So far as I can judge, the outlook for a prosperous season is exceedingly good. My prices on sets of artificial teeth are so reasonable as to ensure me plenty of work in that branch of my profession.

REYNOLDS & SILVERS.

Mr. Reynolds bought the old Gilchrist stock of Sherrard, October 24th, 1881, and soon after Frank Silvers added to it his Clinton livery stock, and the present firm was organized. The firm now control the largest number of horses and the most complete set of rigs ever owned in this village, and their rapidly increasing custom during the past six months shows that the people of this community appreciate their efforts to keep a first class livery. At the head of their list of horses is Banker Rothchilds and Cassius M. Clay, Jr. The farmers in this vicinity know what they are, and it is only necessary to state here that their reputation improves as the years pass on. People who admire good horses are invited to call and see them.

MARY C. DINGMAN.

I am doing finely. Keep a full stock of feathers, flowers, fancy ribbons, chip and Tuscan hats in all the new shapes. Ladies had better call on me before buying their spring millinery.

J. C. ECCLES.

You may say that I have more business now than I can properly attend to, and have no time to be interviewed. If you want a new suit, I will take your measure and make them in tip-top style just as soon as possible.

Adrian Press: A few days ago the son of Mr. J. Townsend living beyond the Wabash depot, went to the barn in the morning to feed the horses. He started to pitch some hay, but observing a buffalo robe on the floor, went to pick it up, when up jumped a tramp who had been snoozing there. The boy in his fright jabbed the pitchfork into ye tramp who yelled murder, and the boy "pricked again," and with the blood running from his wounds the tramp bolted out the door. Meanwhile Townsend, who had heard the cries of murder, rushed out fearing the boy had been hurt, and seeing the tramp coming, promptly knocked him down, and a big bull dog which had followed, took the chap by the throat, and altogether it was getting rather unpleasant for him. The boy came out of the barn, the dog was taken away, and the bleeding tramp dragged himself off down the road.

Mr. Horace Seevill, of Altoona, Pa., says: "My wife and I are upward of seventy years of age. Of late we both have begun to feel the infirmities of old age. Nothing seems to revive, exhilarate, and strengthen us as does Brown's Iron Bitters. We would not do without it for ten times its cost.

Adrian Record: On Wednesday evening a meeting of indignant tax payers was held in Hudson to remonstrate against the action of the council in the matter of street paving, and to protest against the council's plan of improving certain streets. Speeches were made by W. T. B. Schermerhorn, F. R. Pierson, John Whitbeck, W. A. Whitney. Resolutions were adopted declaring that the manifest determination of certain members of the council to arrogate greater knowledge of what the people need in their highway then the people themselves possess, is a violation of duty to those who gave the councilmen office and if persisted in shall meet with political condemnation.

Eighty-Five Dollars Lost.

"You do not mean to tell me that your husband is up and entirely cured by so simple a medicine as Parker's Ginger Tonic?" "Yes, indeed, I do," said Mrs. Benjamin to her neighbor, "and after we had lost eighty-five dollars in doctor's bills and prescriptions. Now my husband feels as well as ever.

Two important postage bills are before congress, one proposing to reduce the rates from 3 cents to two for carrying the same weight as now, and the other proposing to increase the weight now carried for three cents from half an ounce to an ounce. It is not improbable that one or the other will become a law.

DEATH OF LORENZO TABOR.

Lorenzo Tabor, one of the oldest residents of Adrian and for many years an active attorney of that city died last Friday. His funeral was attended on Sunday at the family residence by a very large concourse of people. The bar of Lenawee county met on Saturday afternoon and passed appropriate resolutions upon his death. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Mr. Holmes, who delivered an eloquent address, of which the following is a portion:

One day not long since, while conversing with me on religious subjects, my dear friend Tabor, whirling quickly in his chair toward me, pushing his spectacles up on the front part of his hair, and giving his head the peculiar poise so characteristic of him, said to me: "I will give you my theology in a nut shell." At once he began to recite the beautiful poem of Leigh Hunt's, entitled, "Abou Ben Adhem's Dream." When he had finished, I said in pleasantry: "Well, Mr. Tabor, if you should die, and I be called upon to say a few words over your remains, I would read that poem, and add, this was Mr. Tabor's religion." "Yes, do that," he answered, "for true love of God is shown by our true love of man."

How little did I then think that the pleasantry, spoken so impromptu, would ever be realized! Yet here I stand by the side of my friend, now insensible in death. Here, also, is the poem which I promised to read. I will try and reproduce it as nearly as possible, with his pauses and his inflections:

Abou Ben Adhem—may his tribe increase—
Awoke one night from a sweet dream of peace,
And saw, within the moonlight in his room,
Making it rich and like a lily in bloom
An angel writing in a book of gold.
Exceeding peace had made Ben Adhem bold,
And to the Presence in the room he said,
"What writest thou?" The vision raised its head,
And with a look, made all of sweet accord,
Answered, "The names of those who love the Lord."
"And is mine there?" said Abou, "Nay, not so,"
Replied the angel. Abou spoke more low,
But cheerily still; and said, "I pray thee, then,
Write me as one that loves his fellow men."

The angel wrote and vanished. The next night
He came again, with a great wakening light,
And showed the names whom love of God had blessed,
And, lo! Ben Adhem's name led all the rest.

Is there in this company a single individual, or is there in this city a single citizen who will hesitate to write against the name of Lorenzo Tabor—"One who loved his fellow men?" I wait for an answer. Nay, let me speak more generously, and yet speak within the bounds of truth. For, when the angel,

"With a great wakening light,
Shall show the names whom love of God has blessed,
And lo! Friend Tabor's name leads all the rest."

Fifth degree work in the evening.

The young man who sits himself down and waits for some millionaire to appear and tap him on the shoulder and say: "Come along, my boy and help me spend my money," has a tiresome time of it. Idleness seems to be the rage outside of newspaper offices, and the quicker the young man of the period begins to do something for himself the better for his parent's bank account. It is disgusting to see young men who seem to think the only thing worth living for is to sport a cane, smoke a cigarette and wear a long crown hat that the dealer charges to "the old man."—Ex.

THE Tupper—Peoples' Saving Bank et al., boot and shoe stock is doomed to go the way of all such enterprises, having been taken out of the hands of its former possessors and is now being sold at assignee's sale. Mr. John Smyth who has had charge of the stock for the past few days, has been engaged marking down the stock. Mr. Morrow of Detroit, has charge of the sale and will sell the stock at a quarter off of Mr. Smyth's figures. This will give the losers by the bank a chance to get a part of their money back by discount in the price of their shoe-leather. We refer our readers to the advertisment of sale in another column.

Sunday School Union.

The present prospect is that the meeting of the State Sunday School Union, that is to occur in this village in June, will be of unusual interest. Our people do not often have the opportunity to hear such men as Dr. J. H. Vincint of N. Y. and B. F. Jacobs of Chicago. To perfect arrangements a meeting of all the Sunday School officers and teachers is called for next week Monday evening at the M. E. church, at 7:30 o'clock. Let none fail to be present. More details next week.

MY AMATEUR FARM.

SECOND WEEK.

The sun is bright,—the air is clear,
The darting swallows soar and sing;
And from the stately elms I hear
The bluebird prophesying spring.
—LONGFELLOW.

For one swallow does not make spring, nor yet one fine day.—ARISTOTLE.

The first day of the second week opened up clear, crisp and beautiful. The early robin had come, the darting swallow was seeking some quiet nook for a nest and the lark was pouring forth the song of Spring. The genial rays of the sun gently kissed the buds and blades of grass, enticing them from their winter's hiding places. The babbling brook laughed at the morning light. To the jaded body which had worried through six days of care and work and misfortune, the pure air acted as a tonic and a nervine; it toned up the muscles and toned down the nerves; it enlivened the liver and quieted the brain. All nature was preaching from the text: "This is a day of rest."

I felt that my lucky star was again in the ascendant. Columbus put on his high heeled shoes also, and the spirits in his mental thermometer went up so high that he ordered his wife to dish up the best Sunday dinner she could possibly manufacture. Our bill of fare during the week was plain but rather monotonous. For breakfast we had bread and butter, pork and potato, and apple sass; for dinner we had pork and potato, bread and butter and apple sass; for supper we had apple sass, bread and butter and pork and potato. In addition to our regular week day menu, we had, for this Sunday dinner, bean soup made from six big black beans, a molasses gingerbread two inches thick, cut in sections four inches square, sliced bologna on Johnny-cake toast, some Japanese napkins which Ichabod's wife's sister-in-law had used at her wedding a few days before, and some fresh grated horse radish mixed with mustard and cider vinegar, a tablespoonful of which would make even a Hottentot weep for joy. Such a dinner had never been served up in my family before.

While the gastronomic effects of our noon day meal were at their zenith, Columbus and I blocked out the work for the ensuing six days. One day should be devoted to sowing clover seed on the ten acre wheat lot, a second day to sowing plaster on the meadow, a third to plowing and fixing a patch in the garden for early onions and watermelons, a fourth to weeding and rolling the asparagus, a fifth to fixing the cold frame and sowing tomato and cabbage seed, and the sixth day to drilling in a dozen rows of Bliss's American wonder pea. My daily journal will show how strictly this programme was observed.

Monday, April 11th.—Yesterday's dinner was too much for Ichabod's constitution. He had an attack of rheumatism in his great toe this morning, so he got the horse shod. The team was shod only last Friday, but Kit had been lame ever since, and Ichabod knew it was caused by improper shoeing. Therefore Kit was taken to another blacksmith and a new set of shoes put on all round. It rained in the afternoon and Columbus split wood.

Tuesday, April 12th.—The snow was five inches deep on a level this morning, which made it necessary to postpone the garden work. Columbus husked out some old sweet corn left over from last year, went down town for a curry comb, sharpened the carving knife and fork, mended a hole in the kitchen wood-box and chored round.

Wednesday, April 13th.—The snow of yesterday turned into a rain to-day. Columbus husked out another bushel of sweet corn and drew a load of round wood from the wood yard in the forenoon. I find it an item of great economy to buy round wood. It costs less; it takes twice as long to build a fire, which results in a saving of fuel; and about half the sticks go out and are left over to start a fire with the next day, which is also an important saving. In the afternoon Columbus drew coal ashes to make a path between the house and barn. The path led through the middle of a mud hole. As Ichabod's boots leak, he got his feet wet whenever he went to the barn, which was undoubtedly the cause of his rheumatic attacks. I concluded that the best medicine for his rheumatism was a good dry path from the house to the barn.

Thursday, April 14th—The storm was broken this morning, although it was still drizzling and disgreeable. Columbus drew a load of saw dust for horse feed. We have been graining the horses on wheat bran, but Columbus says that bran and saw dust in equal parts mixed with boiling water and seasoned with salt and cayenne pepper is just as good. The bran costs ninety cents a hundred while good pine saw dust can be had for the drawing. In the afternoon he went to Geo. Tracy's auction. He bid off a flock of brown leghorns—comprising seven hens and ten roosters—at one dollar each, a potash kettle for $52, and a grain cradle for $6.75. I had fifty hens already, but they were the common kind. The owner of the farm left a potash kettle on the place for my use but it held only six barrels. If my reaper should break down, the cradle would come into play. As the property was all in good condition—especially the kettle—I concluded, like Mrs. Toodles, that they would be mighty handy to have in the house, and cheerfully gave my note for $75.75 to liquidate the purchase price.

Friday, April 5th.—It rained again to-day. Columbus got his hoes mended and husked out three more bushels of sweet corn.

Saturday, April 16th.—A shower in the morning. Columbus took harness to the shop to have a tug spliced, split wood, put the wood shed door on the hinges and chored around.

OUR FIRST RACE.

The Trotting Last Saturday on C. D. Bills' New Track. A Good Opening of the Season.

Last Saturday we were invited to go down and see a little trot on C. D. Bill's new track. Jehiel Davidson came around after dinner and we drove down to the track, took a front seat and proceeded to see what was going on. The track was in fair condition, although a little dusty. Quite a number of people had come down to see the sport, and when the horses arrived a good deal of interest was shown as to what was going to be done and who had the best horse. Bills bro't out his sorrel mare, Laura Keene. J. and J. Allen of Cambridge, their grey stallion Siam Chief and grey mare Cambridge Maid. Cooper of Adrian, his bay stallion Frank Forrester, and Reynolds & Silvers their iron grey stallion Banker Rothchilds. About half-past two a heat was called for the mares. Laura Keene and Cambridge Maid got to their places and after a false start or two made a half mile heat. Laura Keene was far too much for the grey mare, and easily took this as well as the next heat. Keene trots very well and when she gets well worked a little in the season will show some good time.

The three stallions trotted three mile heats. Cooper's horse taking the first, Allen's grey the second and Banker Rothchilds the third. The bay horse trotted very well, but showed too much work making him a little lame for the third heat. Banker Rothchilds did splendid work and for a horse of his weight has certainly wonderful speed. Allen's grey did the most honest work on the track Saturday, and Allen hopes before the season is over that he will be able to do much better. All in all this was a fine beginning and we are in hopes to see some good trotting here before next fall. Mr. Bills has been to quite an expense fitting up the track, has it now in fair condition, and with a little more expense it could be put in A No. 1 shape.

The horses were all green last Saturday, none of them having had any work to speak of this spring. Let us see what they will do after they get some work.

Next Friday there will be a trot for green horses.

A Boy Again.

Pain and sickness bring on old age with fearful rapidity. They make an incessant drain on the vital forces, and the weary steps and faded cheeks of age often comes when the enjoyment of life should be at its highest. Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" turns this kind of old age into youth again. Headache, pains in the limbs, bowels or kidneys vanish before it, and feeble men and women become like rollicking school boys and girls once more. One dollar a bottle, either at your druggists or from the Doctor at Roundout, N. Y.

HOP BITTERS NEVER FAIL

Marrying Titles.

It was not long since that a French count in Paris, who had married a wealthy and accomplished American lady, was detected secretly pawning her diamonds and jewels to raise money to gamble with, while she lay on her death-bed. He had spent immense sums of her money in betting and gambling, and in living a life of profligacy, and had treated her so cruelly during their short married life that she died broken-hearted. [illegible] the Kingdom of Wurtemburg which caused quite a ripple in the upper class of society there at the time. A German baron, who had started with his wife to visit her home in America, had got as far as the railway station when he was arrested by his creditors, who supposed he was fleeing the country never to return, for heavy debts which he had incurred through gambling and a dissolute life. He had no means with him to pay the demands; neither had his wife, and as their trunks had been sent on in advance, and the arrangements all made for the journey, he told his wife to keep on and he would meet her in Liverpool before the sailing of their steamer after having made some arrangements with his creditors. This wife went on to Liverpool and this baron stayed behind, but it was four or five days before he was able to satisfy his creditors, either by promise or interposition of some kind friend so as to be able to depart. While thus detained, the pocket money his wife had given him to pay his expenses to Liverpool had disappeared, but another compassionate friend was induced to loan him $500, by giving security on his wife's furniture and silver-plate so that he was enabled to start on his journey. Passing through London he fell among gamblers at one of the clubs who could handle cards better than he could, and his $500 quickly disappeared with the exception of a small amount just sufficient to take him to Liverpool, where he at length arrived to find that his wife had left in a steamer three days previous, and himself without a dollar in his pocket. Representing himself to one of the steamer agents who he was, and showing papers that identified him as being a veritable baron, he was permitted to take passage on the next steamer, with the understanding that his passage would be paid at the other end of the route, where his wife or wife's relations would come to his aid—and which it is to be presumed they did. An American lady who married a title in Saxony, after enduring several years of cruel treatment, neglect and misery, recently took sudden flight to her friends across the Atlantic, forsaking the bed and board of her titled husband, never to return to it.

Such incidents as these of unhappy marriages contracted by American girls abroad are constantly taking place, and a record of their histories and the wretched lives which many of them have led would fill volumes. Marriages with foreigners, which have proved happy and unalloyed with more or less misery are exceptional and far between. To those ambitious mothers who would sell their daughters for a title, and to those daughters who would run the risk of sacrificing future happiness by uniting themselves to worthless scions of nobility, I would give Punch's advice to the unmarried—"Don't."—Springfield Republican.

A Missing Baby.

A woman was wheeling a baby-wagon carefully across the Campus Martius yesterday, when several men screamed to her to "look out!" and a span of horses, driven wildly, came tearing across, as if about to demolish everybody. With the persistency of her sex, however, the woman looked the other way, and in a moment the baby-wagon was overthrown and lay turned over in a heap, while the carriage kept on up Woodward avenue without even slacking speed.

One man in a spring overcoat and sunflower gloves ran and turned the buggy up, expecting to find the baby dead underneath, and a number of ladies shrieked and begged him to get the "dear little thing out." Several gentlemen who had been leaning in a musing mood against the Detroit opera-house, essayed to help him, but though they righted the buggy, no baby was seen.

"It must have clung to the horse and have been carried off," suggested another.

"How did it get away?" they all asked.

"No doubt the poor little thing is dead by this time," said another kindly matron. "Have you looked all through the things?"

At this moment it occurred to some of them that the mother would be the right person to appeal to, and they turned to her. She was standing coolly on the crossing, arms akimbo, watching the proceedings.

"The baby is all right," she said airily. "I left her home while I took the buggy to bring the washing. Hev you got all the pieces picked up? cos if you have I might as well be goin' on."

To see the disgust impressed on the countenances of all interested was a study in human nature. Not one of the crowd was glad that baby was safe at home. They would much rather have picked it out of the mud. But each one recalled the fact that a man was hung once for not attending to his own business, and sneaked off.—Detroit Post.

In a paper read before the Paris Societe de Medecine, M. Chervin points out that, while up to the census of 1860 the colored population of our Southern states numbered 4,880,000, in that of 1880 it had increased to 6,557,151, an augmentation of 35 per cent. He regards this as an important fact because "it has always been hitherto admitted that when an inferior race comes in contact with a superior one, it must disappear sooner or later, on account of the excess of deaths over births." M. Chervin regards liberty and agricultural prosperity as the underlying cause of the happy results above mentioned.

A gentleman living near Athens, Ga., has a gourd that has been used to hold pepper and spices over two hundred years. The genealogy of the gourd is clearly traced.

Happiness is like the echo; it answers you, but it does not come.

Superstitious Engineers.

"What causes, aside from snow-storms and accidents, make passenger trains late in arriving at stations?" inquired a Post reporter of the division superintendent.

"Well, they are innumerable; but there is one cause of delay which is quite curious and almost unaccountable. Like sailors, engineers are very superstitious. I suppose they become so from the comparative solitude and dangers of their positions. With only a fireman as a companion, they are out in all kinds of weather, and, I can tell you, it is no pleasant thing for a man to ride at full speed on a dark night peering out of a little window into a blackness made more black by the bright glare of the headlight. On all sides is darkness, and the little speck of luminous track ahead is all that he can see. Certain engines, like certain ships, get bad reputations, and the men hate to run them. They consider them unlucky, and believe they are bound to kill somebody, and so will refuse to drive them at top speed. This feeling is almost universal among engineers. We have an engine on our road now which the men very much dislike to be assigned to. I was once on a road in the West which owned an engine which the men were positively afraid of, it was so unlucky.

"Yes, all engineers are more or less superstitious; their calling makes them so. At one time one of our fast trains from New York kept coming into Hartford from two to five minutes late. At first I thought it was due to some material cause, but at last, as the train arrived in New Haven on time, I determined to find out the trouble. On the arrival of the train in New Haven the engineers were changed, and, as the time was all right up to that point, I knew that time was being lost between there and Hartford. I couldn't understand it, for the road is good all the way, and time should be made up over it, instead of lost. I went down there one day and asked the engineer what made him late so repeatedly. He said he didn't know, only that the engine would not make time. He had always been a competent man, and was thought much of on the road. I got into the cab with him, and, after a short distance had been passed, found that the engine was not doing its part. I told the engineer to throw open the throttle-valve. At first he refused to do so, but when I repeated the order he did so, and we reached Hartford on time. After that he was never late because of the engine. The fact was that he had got scared; but after he had been relieved of all apprehension the train came in regularly on schedule time.

"Once, when I was running a night train between here and Springfield, I had a queer experience. My fireman was a young fellow who, twice, when we reached the bridge over the Connecticut at Windsor Locks, disappeared from the cab. The third time I watched him, and noticed that he had gone into the tender and crouched down in the coal in one corner. When we were well into the bridge I called out to him, and he came into the cab with a face as white as marble, and he was shaking all over. I asked him what was the matter, and he said, 'There's some fellows up in the rafters there, and some time they're going to chuck rocks at us.' You see, the idea had suggested itself to him one night, and, being superstitious, he had carried it around in his head until he really believed it."—Hartford (Ct.) Post.

Fate of an Acrobat.

We see no more good reason for making a stage business of such exercise as may develop one's physical health and strengthen the limbs, than for making a public business of keeping one's teeth and hands clean. What mother would wish her son to be a professional rope-dancer or circus-tumbler—not to mention her daughter? Aside from the unnaturalness and debasing effect of such a life, the "accidents" to which even the best-trained and most experienced performers are liable are too frequent and of too sad a kind to be generally known. It is for the showman's interest to keep them secret.

When a "great show" recently came to the city of Brooklyn, a family group of three persons sat down together in the breakfast-tent. They were acrobats of unsurpassed agility and skill. A sad-faced woman, a young man of middle size, a girl just entering her teens.

There had been four of them prior to a recent performance, but the "star," an elder girl, the most daring of them all, had "missed her motion" in a feat of uncommon peril, and had fallen upon the receiving-net.

"She was but slightly injured," all were told who cared or thought to ask, but the little group at the table knew that she was dying.

They performed their parts, that day, as skilfully as ever, though with so much more weight than usual to carry, but when the evening exhibition was over, there were indeed but three of them. The fourth had gone forever.—St. Nicholas.

Care of China, Glass and Silverware.

Ladies, if you wish to preserve your pet china, and make your glass and silver sparkle and shine, wash them yourselves, and use a mop for the purpose. A sufferer from careless servants gives the directions:

"This mop should be made of soft crochet cotton, tied or crocheted in tassel-like form around a handle, with a turned knob at the end for this purpose. Such mops may be bought in the shops for a quarter. Fastidious people have two pans of water, and one clear for rinsing. The china should be wiped immediately from the pan with a dry towel, and not left to drain, and at least two tea towels should be in use for a single time. The glasses should be washed first, and held obliquely when dipped in the water, so as to let the heat of the water strike them gradually. The silver should be wiped hot, and then rubbed over with a piece of chamois skin; with this treatment it is always in condition, and rarely needs a special day for cleaning."

A young lady was showing an elderly woman a beautiful cluster diamond ring, a present, when the old lady dropped her spectacles to the end of her nose, and exclaimed, "Lor' sakes, I thought it was an old seed wart!"

WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY & LIVER CURE

Disease is an effect, not a cause. Its origin is within; its manifestations without. Hence, to cure the disease the cause must be removed, and in no other way can a cure ever be effected. WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY AND LIVER CURE is established on just this principal. It realizes that of all diseases arise from deranged kidneys and liver, and it strikes at once at the root of the difficulty. The elements of which it is composed act directly upon these great organs, both as a food and a restorer, and by placing them in a healthy condition, drive disease and pain from the system.

For the innumerable troubles caused by unhealthy Kidneys, Liver and Urinary Organs; for the distressing Disorders of Women; for Malaria, and for physical derangements generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

We are constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

ALL SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, PAIN IN THE SIDE, INFLAMMATION of LUNGS and LIVER, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, PAINS AND AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, ERYSIPELAS, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all diseases attendant with INFLAMMATION.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood; by this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its virtues is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have never used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

Gents—Whoever you are, I don't know, but I thank the Lord and feel grateful to you to know that in this world of adulterated medicines there is one compound that proves and does all it advertises to do, and more. Four years ago I had a slight shock of palsy, which unnerved me to such an extent that the least excitement would make me shake like the ague. Last May I was induced to try Hop Bitters. I used one bottle, but did not see any change; another did so change my nerves that they are now as steady as they ever were. It used to take both hands to write, but now my good right hand writes this. Now, if you continue to manufacture as honest and good an article as you do, you will accumulate an honest fortune, and confer the greatest blessing on your fellow men that was ever conferred on mankind.

APRIL 25.—In the senate, a joint resolution was passed granting the use of tents for the soldiers' reunion at Belle Plaine, Iowa. Mr. Voorhees offered a resolution of inquiry whether legislation is necessary to secure an impartial determination of cases triable in the federal courts, more particularly in the south. A bill was passed to permit the grinding of grain brought over by Canadian farmers. The river improvement bill, giving $5,000,000 for the Mississippi and $1,000,000 for the Missouri, was passed without objection. The anti-Chinese bill then came up. The fourteenth section, prohibiting the naturalization of Celestials, was retained by a vote of 32 to 26. The fifteenth section, relating to skilled laborers, was stricken out, when an adjournment was effected.

APRIL 26.—The bill passed for a public building in Fort Wayne, Ind. The political disabilities bill was laid aside without action, and the Senate resumed consideration of the Chinese bill. Mr. Slater argued in favor of restoring the clause making the word "laborer" mean skilled or unskilled. Mr. Hawley spoke vigorously against the Chinese bill, denouncing it as monstrous legislation which he would leave to posterity to condemn. Mr. Edmunds moved to amend the section under discussion by striking out "laborer" and inserting the word "Chinese laborer." Mr. Farley spoke in favor of the retention of the clause, and was entering into a general anti-Chinese argument when Mr. Ingalls interrupted him and said the people of California had the remedy in their own hands. The Chinese would not stay in that state did not the citizens employ them. Messrs. Farley and Dawes then had a controversy as to the Chinese in New England. The latter yielded the floor on a motion to go into executive session.

APRIL 26.—In the senate Mr. Sherman introduced a bill repealing the law which forces the coinage of two million standard dollars per month, and directing the manufacture of silver dollars when the secretary of the treasury deems it necessary for public convenience. A motion to take up a bill to punish the unlawful certification of [illegible] checks was lost by a tie vote. On a measure to repeal the section of the statutes prohibiting confederates from holding positions in the army there occurred the most bitter partisan debate of the session. Mr. Edmunds led the opposition, and Messrs. Vest, Garland, Maxey and Hampton took a hand in favor of the provision. The customary wrangle to 8 places on the Chinese bill, without action. The conference report on the postoffice appropriation bill was adopted, the item for fast mails for the principal cities being made $20,000.

APRIL 28.—The senate passed the house bill to fix the time for holding elections in West Virginia. Mr. Conger reported a bill repealing the tonnage tax on vessels trading with Canada, as also to reduce the hospital tax to 10 cents per month on each sailor. When the anti-Chinese bill came up a motion to strike out the section in regard to skilled and unskilled laborers was lost by 26 to 27. After the rejection of several amendments, the bill was passed by 32 to 15. An executive session was held, when an adjournment to Monday was taken.

HOUSE.

APRIL 24.—The house passed a bill appropriating $50,000 for the removal of obstructions from Hell Gate, New York. Mr. Buckner presented a resolution calling for information in regard to the monetary conference, and Mr. Cox a similar inquiry respecting the contracts of American nations. Mr. Dezendorf introduced a bill appropriating $100,000 to erect a presidential mansion. Mr. Evans, by request, presented a scheme to issue $75,000,000 treasury notes and exchange it at par for the Mississippi, Missouri, and Union bonds. A bill for a uniform system of bankruptcy was reported by Mr. Humphrey. A hot debate occurred on the measure to appoint one hundred additional policemen for the District of Columbia, but the bill passed by 117 to 69.

APRIL 25.—The house passed a bill authorizing the Sioux City and Pacific road to bridge the Missouri river. A resolution was adopted inquiring about the monetary conference in Paris. The judiciary committee was instructed to look into the validity of the speaker's action in removing Mr. Devine, an official stenographer. A communication from the third auditor announced that $2,000,000 was due the State of Missouri for payments to her militia during the war. When the contested election case of Lynch versus Chalmers came up, the house refused to consider it, by 121 to 99. Mr. Robinson called up his resolutions in regard to the imprisonment of American citizens abroad, and addressed the house. Mr. Cox offered a substitute, which was adopted, calling on the president for additional information and urging the continuance of efforts for the prompt release or trial of American suspects in Ireland.

APRIL 26.—Mr. Calkins called up the contested election case of Lynch vs. Chalmers. Mr. Randall raised the question of consideration, and the House decided—yeas, 115; nays, 99—to consider. The report was then read. The House spent the entire afternoon on the case, Messrs. Pettibone and Moore speaking in support of the committee's report to seat Lynch, and Mr. Atherton opposing it. A bill was favorably reported to pay $137,000 to officers and men on board the vessels commanded by Flag Officer Farragut.

APRIL 27.—In the house, Mr. Townsend submitted a conference report favoring the pension feature in the bill to promote the efficiency of the life-saving service. When the Mississippi contested election case came up, Lynch, the colored claimant, made a finished argument in his own behalf, while Chalmers entreated the house not to disregard the decisions of the supreme court of Mississippi. A message from the president was read, recalling the lawless acts perpetrated by cowboys in Arizona, and recommending that the army be permitted to cooperate with the civil authorities. Mr. Rangall offered resolutions calling on the comptroller of the currency for his correspondence with the Second National Bank of Cincinnati as to its reorganization.

APRIL 28.—The house adopted a resolution that the secretary of war furnish information as to the number of United States soldiers in Arizona, and whether legislation is necessary to guard life and property from destruction by Indians. In the Mississippi contested election case, Messrs. Hooker and Tucker supported the claims of General Chalmers, while Mr. Robeson argued against the decision of the supreme court of Mississippi. Mr. Calkins demanded the previous question, but no vote was taken, previous to adjournment.

APRIL 29.—In the house Mr. Page moved concurrence in the senate amendments to the anti-Chinese bill, but Mr. Hooker objected. A resolution was adopted for sending a sub-committee to New York to take testimony in the Peruvian investigation. In the Mississippi contested election case, Mr. Calkins closed the debate by a speech of two hours. The vote on the minority resolution to seat Gen. Chalmers stood 104 to 125. On the resolution to seat Lynch, the colored contestant, the vote stood 125 to 83. The fortunate man was escorted to the bar by Mr. Calkins, and sworn in by the speaker. A bill was passed directing the secretary of the treasury to refund to Colonel Thompson the sum of $496.80 paid to the collector at Chicago on uniforms imported for company G, 6th regiment Illinois National guard. A conference report on the postoffice appropriation bill was agreed to.

FRANKLIN SHEEP SHEARING.

A Good Crowd of People in Attendance and Fine Show of Sheep.

Last Friday occurred the regular annual Sheep Shearing Festival of the sheep growers and sheep breeders of Franklin. The day was not the finest they could have had for a sheep shearing, being cold and raw, but the sheep men turned out pretty generally and brought with them a good number of sheep, although not quite as many as last year. The sheep in Lenawee county are each year growing better as our farmers are alive on this subject and are sparing no pains or money to improve their stock.—We give below a list of sheep shown followed by a table of the shearing:

A. J. Sayres, Franklin; 3 year old ram, 7 yearling ewes.

Henry Wilson, Tecumseh; ram 2 years old sired by Centenial, 4 three-years old ewes with lambs, 2 yearling ewes.

O. P. Remington & Son, Clinton; 3 yearling rams; also fleece of dead yearling ram, 401 days growth, 20 lbs. 6 oz, unwashed wool.

R. S. King & Son, Bridgewater; 2 three-year old ewes, 3 two-year old ewes, 2 five-year old ewes, 1 yearling ram.

Osborn Brothers, Frankling; 4 yr. rams, 3 yr. old ram, Hannis; 7 yr. ewes, 4 ewes with lambs, 4 ewes with lamb.

This show of sheep was probably as good as any on the ground. Their ram, Hannis, was bred by C. A. Miller, Marshall, Calhoun Co., Mich.—He is a fine 3 yr-old and is remarkable for his fine form, thickness and length of staple and stock getting qualities. They have a very large flock of registered merino sheep which they have spared no pains to make the best in this section of the country. They have made some good sales this season, and their stock is in shape to make better ones next season.

F. W. De Puy, Clinton; 2 two-year old ewes, 3 three-year old ewes, 1 four year old ewe, all registered.

C. M. Fellows, Sharon; 3 two-year old ewes and 3 yr-old ewe, registered; 3 year old ram, "Centennial."

His 3 year old ram, "Centennial," bred by Stickney is large size and has unexceptionable form. Mr. Fellows purchased him, at large expense, in Vermont, last season, and he is certainly one of the finest rams in the country.

C. C. Dorr, Sharon; 2 year, lambs, registered.

VanGiesen & Bro., Clinton; 2 yearling rams.

Burt Crittenden, Franklin; yearling ram.

J. N. F. Bowen, Tecumseh; 2 year old registered ewe.

Frank Bryan, Franklin; 3 year old ram.

Woman's Triumph

(From the Correspondence of the Kingston, N. Y. Freeman.)

The case of Mrs. Edward Myers, of Roundout, New York, furnishes an apt illustration of woman's power of endurance. This lady had been treated for months in the usual way for Erysipelas of the hand without benefit. Not until her hand had become a mass of putrified flesh did she turn to Dr. Kennedy proprietor of the "Favorite Remedy," for help.

He at once informed her that it was impossible to save the hand—it must be amputated. She received the terrible intelligence quietly, declined to take ether, stipulating merely to hold her husband's hand during the operation, and underwent the painful process without moving a muscle or uttering a groan. Dr. Kennedy then gave "Favorite Remedy" freely to cleanse the blood and prevent the return of the disease, and Mrs. Myers now lives and rejoices in her great deliverance.

"Favorite Remedy" is fast becoming a trusted household friend in all cases of Female Weakness and diseases of the blood. One dollar a bottle. Your druggist has it.

A SPRING DEFENSE.

How to Repel the Assaults of Ill Health—Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY Means Something for You.

The months of March, April and May are the three successive arches of a bridge which connects the season of ice and sleet with that of leaves and roses. No less in respect of health than of other ward natural phenomena is this true. Spring is a trying season for invalids, and particularly for those who either suffer, or are liable to suffer from Biliousness, Kidney complaint and Constipation of the Bowels, and for women who are chronically subject to any of the long catalogue of physical ailments to which their delicate sex is heir. Indications of disease in spring should be heeded at once. A fatal attack may easily result from neglect or a disordered condition of the bowels. The ounce of prevention may be had where tons of cure or attempted cure—may be unavailing. Are you vexed or troubled in spring with indigestion, torpid or disordered liver, want of appetite, constipation, or a feverish state of the skin? If so, take without an hour's unnecessary delay Dr. Kennedy,s FAVORITE REMEDY. No medicine is so harmless and yet so quick and positive in its action. It is Nature's own idea, condensed and made tangible by human skill. Do not leave home when going upon a journey without a bottle of it in your valise. You cannot possibly put one dollar in any other shape where it can render you so essential service. The Favorite Remedy is almost instantaneous in its action, but does not tear you to pieces with its violence nor nauseate you with disgust. It frees the liver from bile and sets the machinery of your body into normal and healthy operation. Remember Dr. D. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. Ask your druggist for it and take nothing else. Price One Dollar a bottle.

Rob. McWilliams now has a head sawyer of his own—a boy.

Rev. J. Kilpatrick officiated last Saturday and Sabbath as Presiding Elder at Carlton.

Lewis Priest buried a child, aged 3 years, on Thursday of this week, which died from a spinal affection.

A daughter of Albert Eaton, aged 16 years, died suddenly last week and was buried from the M. E. church on Friday of last week.

Mr. Oliver, the old gentleman, and Mrs. Geo. Getty, have been on the sick list for some time, but are improving.

G. W. Clark is treating his dwelling to a new coat of paint. Others are to follow the example soon.

The stallion nuisance is again obliged to be endured by those living west of the P. O., and any others who may chance to have business on that street. Has it got to be?

Sam. Fletcher has purchased and removed the old shop on the Santus lot.

The new telegraph line, which is now in operation between the village and station will be known as the Ridgeway and Britton local telegraph line. The company who constructed and own the line consist of two firms, Waring & Kniffin and Britton & Son, who put it up for their own use and convenience rather than for speculation. However as the public may desire in some instances to use the line the company decided to charge a small fee and have adopted the following terms, which go into effect Monday, May 15: The regular rate for sending messages will be 10c for ten words or less, and 1c each for all additional words. All business furnished at the west end of the line shall be subject to the regular rate of charges. All business furnished at the east end of the line shall be subject to the regular rate, excepting railway business (such as the railway company's agent may determine to be of sufficient interest to said company to warrant the use of the wire,) which may be done free of charge. By this arrangement it may be understood that trains when behind time will be reported. All Western Union messages will be repeated, and answers by the agent at the station to all questions concerning railway matters will be given free of charge at the village. The office at the village is located in the store of G. W. Clark & Son and managed by A. B. Clark, who has become quite proficient as an operator.

Northwestern Summer Institute.

For many years there has been a demand in the northwest for a Summer Institute which would afford teachers and others the opportunity of combining study with the rest and recreation of a delightful summer resort.—To meet this demand the Northwestern Summer Institute has been established at Petoskey, Mich. The institute will be managed by a corps of instructors, ten in number, from the University and Normal school. The new school buildings of Petoskey have been secured in which to hold the sessions of the Institute, and the full course will be five weeks in length.—Tuition for the entire course, in any department, will be $15. Instruction and lectures will be given in the French and German languages, Pedegogy, Physics and Astronomy, Physiology and Histology, Zoology, Microscopy, English Language and Literature and Geology. Regular class work will begin on Thursday, July 13th, and will continue five weeks. For a catalogue containing full details of the courses of instruction and lectures and all other necessary information address Louis J. Fasquelle, Business Agent, Ann Arbor, Michigan.

THE editor of the Adrian Press is crying for more wood. So it seems that editors in other towns as well as Tecumseh need a little fuel occasionally. Read what he says: "That wood dear reader; that wood you have so solemnly promised, why bringest thou it not? That Raisin reader, that Clayton reader, that Dover man, that Palmyra subscriber, that Fairfield patron, and all the others who wanted to bring wood; each is notified that he has our permission to haul it. Bring it right along. Don't wait.

Marriage of Miss Allie King.

In the Sedalia Bazoo, of April 21st, we find the following marriage notice which will interest many of our readers:

A pleasant, though quiet and informal wedding took place last night at the residence of Mr. Fred VanCamp, on Seventh street, the contracting parties being Miss Allie King, a sister of Mrs. VanCamp, and a young lady well known in society here, and Mr. Thos. N. Lewis. There were but a few invited guests present, but the occasion was a very enjoyable one. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Alleh J. VanWagner, in his happiest vein, after which the assembled guests did ample justice to the elegant refreshments with which they were served.

The bride was attired in an elegant and appropriate costume of bronze-green silk, the jupe made with a fan plaited ruffle at the bottom, above which was a double box plaiting, headed by the fan plaiting, this surmounted by knit plaiting, which extended to the waist. The over-drapery was full panniers drawn beneath sash bows and ends. The corsage was plain, filled in with rich Spanish lace. A cluster of pond lilies at the throat and diamond earrings was a fitting finish to this lovely toilet.

The attendants of the bride and groom were Miss Mable Van Camp and Mr. Frank Hardcastle.

The Liquor Tax.

The liquor tax collected up to and including May 6, in this County amounts to $15,530; which will be largely in excess of any previous year. The amount paid by the different towns and cities in the county is as follows:

Adrian	$9230
Blissfield	900
Clayton	300
Clinton	600
Deerfield	600
Hudson	1500
Morenci	600
Riga	300
Tecumseh	1500

Morenci Observer: The announcement that the late Tecumseh bank would pay 15 cents on the dollar of its indebtedness has led some to suppose that the old Tecumseh Bank that failed about 20 years since was about to do something for its swindled bill holders, and quite a number of the notes of the old defunct concern have come to the light. It is a private bank that failed only a short time since, and is expected to pay this small percentage on its deposits, and has nothing to do with the old dead concern of two decades ago, so let the old notes go back to their dusty hiding places again.

Mr. Palmer F. Dale living near Savannah, Ga., says: "Myself and family have always, since living in this locality, been troubled with malarial disorders. Hearing that Brown's Iron Bitters were a sure preventive, we have all used it sparingly, and as a result none of us have since been sick."

Litchfield Gazette: At Hillsdale the girls are being educated in the "broom drill." We are opposed to their education in this direction and trust the "drill" will not become general. Who has ever seen a woman not highly proficient in handling the broom—entirely too much so for the peace and safety of their husbands. No, our girls don't need any "culchaw" in this direction. They may look very pretty on the stage, but after marriage the "drill" seems to become second nature without any previous training, and broken craniums attest that they can go through the manual equal to the best French drill-master. Give them an ax and drill them in splitting wood. What do you say, benedicts?

Deerfield Record: Mrs. Keegan met with a serious accident between 9 and 10 o'clock, Wednesday forenoon. She was engaged in her usual household duties, and when near the head of the stairway, she made a misstep and fell down the whole length of the stairs. In the fall she hit her head on some sharp projection, severing the artery near the right temple, which bled profusely and the flow of blood was with considerable difficulty stopped. The great loss of blood made her very weak, and she is now in a low condition, although no fears are entertained of her complete recovery.

Deerfield Record: The Ledger man claims that Dundee has more and handsomer young ladies between the ages of fifteen and seventeen years than any town in the State. Pardon him, girls, for he is an Ohio man and hasn't lived in Michigan but a few months. Say! mister, if you want to see some pretty lasses, just drop into our post-office some morning while the mail is being distributed.

A Boy Again.

Pain and sickness bring on old age with fearful rapidity. They make an incessant drain on the vital forces, and the weary steps and faded cheeks of age often come when the enjoyment of life should be at its highest. Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" turns this kind of old age into youth again. Headache, pains in the limbs, bowels or kidneys vanish before it, and feeble men and women become like rollicking school boys and girls once more. One dollar a bottle, either at your druggists or from the Doctor at Roundout, N. Y.

Morenci Observer: There is a miserable little bird flitting through the forest that never has any nest of its own, but deposits its eggs to be hatched in some honest bird's nest. This reminds us of some of our local temperance workers who are constantly seeking to obtrude their hobbies upon societies organized for other specific work, instead of placing them honestly and squarely before the public on their own merits.

Given up by Doctors.

"Is it possible that Mr. Godfrey is up and work, and cured by so simple a remedy?"

"I assure you it is true that he is entirely cured, and with nothing but Hop Bitters; and only ten days ago his doctors gave him up and said he must die!"

"Well-a-day! That's remarkable! I will go this day and get some for my poor George—I know hops are good."

Is Physical Perfection Worth Striving For.

Do you wish to be perfect in mind and body? Do you wish to be healthy and strong in all your parts? Then lay all other remedies aside and use Brown's Iron Bitters. It will surely infuse new life and new vigor into the whole human system. It gives perfection to every part, increases the muscles and strengthens the nerves.

Clinton News: When John Bush opened Frank Brown's hardware store this morning, he found the back door unlocked and the coal fire bright and glowing, as though it had recently been shaken down. Inferring that Frank had been ahead of him, he thought nothing more of it until he discovered the money drawer lying under the counter, and its contents, between three and four dollars, gone. A hatchet was found lying near, with which the drawer had evidently been broken open. A young man was hanging about the store Wednesday evening, whose conduct was rather suspicious, and the theory is that he secreted himself in the stairway until after the store was locked up for the night, and then committed the robbery, unbolted the back door and "skipped." Mr. Bush is positive he bolted the back door. Constable Burroughs is on the track of the thief.

A Peerless Perfume.

The refreshing aroma of Floreston Cologne, and its lasting fragrance make it a peerless perfume for the toilet.

The Heart's Choice.

BY HENRY A. LAVELY.

A painter quickly seized his brush
And on the canvas, wrought
The sweetest image of his soul
His heart's most secret thought.

A minstrel gently struck his lyre,
And wondrous notes I heard
Which burned and thrilled and soothed by turns
And all my being stirred.

A singer sang a simple song
The echo of his soul:
It vibrates still through all my life
And hints the in its goal.

A poet took his pen and wrote
A line of hope and love,
It was a heaven-born thought and breathed
Of purest joys above.

A man of God what time my heart
Was weighed with sorrow down,
Spoke golden words of faith and trust
And they became my crown.

I see the painter's picture still,
I hear the minstrel's lyre,
The singer's song, the poet's thought
Still glow with sacred fire.

But in my heart's most hallowed realm
The good man's words do live,
And through my life a perfume breathe
That nought of earth can give.

MOGGS' MONKEY.

His real name was Phil, and he was a boy of about ten years of age; blue-eyed golden-haired, lithe of limb and graceful, and as unlike a monkey as it was possible for a boy to be.

As for Moggs, he was Phil's father, and his real name was Moggridge, though no one, not even his most distant acquaintances, ever thought of calling him by it.

He was a street acrobat, and conjuror, and earned a scanty and precarious living by performing on a square of carpet set in the roadways, attired in a gorgeous flesh-colored costume, with spangles, while his head was bound with a fillet of gold braid.

When Phil was quite a little fellow, almost a baby, he had taken part in these exhibitions; had been tossed about like a ball by his father, and led around among the spectators by his mother to carry the hat and beg for coppers, in which latter line of the business he had always been highly successful.

When Moggs had first started in the public exercise of his profession, he had possessed quite a respectable company of performers; he had a poodle who could walk on his fore paws, dance on his hind legs, march like a soldier, and shoulder a musket, and a monkey who was one of the cleverest and most amusing of his kind; but, in the course of time, the poodle had been stolen, and the monkey went off in a consumption and died, and Moggs and Phil were left to carry on the business alone.

It was then that the boy came out in a new character, and acquired the name by which he was ever afterwards known, "Moggs' Monkey."

He had a mask like a monkey's head, and used to clap it on over his own sunny face, and then, donning a little red cap and a jacket to which had been artfully fixed a long monkey's tail, he would go through all poor Jacko's tricks, as nimbly and cleverly as the defunct animal itself had done.

It used to draw crowds of lookers-on but for all that the business was a poor one, and the father and son had altogether a very liberal allowance of "hard time." Perhaps it was this which made the poor draggle-tailed wife age prematurely, and at last, following in the monkey's steps, go off in a rapid consumption and die, to the great grief of the husband and child, who wept sincerely over her grave in the poor quarter of a crowded London cemetery, and then went drearily back to their daily toil of tumbling and conjuring feeling as though they were becoming a very small and forlorn band indeed.

Phil missed his mother terribly; they had loved each other passionately in their poor common way, and the boy's heart ached for the love and sympathy which had so brightened his hard bitter life.

For, despite his gay dress, his pink stockings, and spangles, and his laughable monkey disguise, it was often a very dreary life indeed.

There were days when the wind was cold and keen, when no sun shone, and the roads were wet and muddy, and when, of course, it was eminently unpleasant to have to go out in his light breezy costume; days, too, when he had to wear a merry face, and tumble about, feeling dreadfully haggy and miserable, and times when the public were stingy and indisposed to bestow their coppers, and the police harassed them, and drove them about from pillar to post, until they were ready to drop from mortification and weariness.

Yet still they stuck together, and loved each other, and hoped for better times, and then all at once into Phil's heart there crept something warm and bright, which nestled there, and made a rosy glow of happiness in the midst of his blackest troubles.

The fact was that Phil fell in love.

Yes, though he was only a boy of ten years of age, he fell as hopelessly and earnestly in love as though he had been twenty, and romantic into the bargain.

His idol was a little girl of nearly his own age, the daughter of a stage-carpenter, who lived in the rooms next his own; a brown-eyed, dark-haired lassie, full of life and fun, and with a heart as warm and true as Phil's.

They were playmates, when they had any time for play, and they always sympathised with each other's woes, and shared each other's joys—whether they came in the shape of halfpence or apples, cold pudding or cake.

In short, Jennie reciprocated Phil's affection, and they had plighted their troth, one moonlight Sunday night, in the attic which was Phil's home.

They had promised to be true to each other, and love each other for ever, even when they were grown up, and Jennie was to be Phil's wife and trudge after him through London streets, and carry round the hat for the money as Phil's mother had done.

And when in their childish innocence they went to their two fathers, who were playing at cribbage by the fireside, they were quite hurt and offended because the men laughed. Indeed, Moggs laughed so heartily that the tears ran down his cheeks, and yet his laugh ended in a sob, which sounded rather like crying, as he bent and kissed first Jennie and then Phil.

"Well, well," said Tom Brown, who was Jennie's father, "this beats everything I ever heard on. The dramar isn't anythink to it. And so you're going to be my son-in-law, young feller?"

Phil nodded gravely.

"And you're thinking as my Jennie is going on the everlasting tramp with you, eh? It won't do for her, Phil; she'd die on it in a month. You must strike out a better line afore you marries my girl. Now don't you think I'm right?"

Phil mused for a few moments. He was thinking of his mother, and how thin and faded, and limp and shabby she had been, and how she had pined, and suffered, and died; and he answered at last that he thought Tom Brown was right, and that he shouldn't like to see Jennie leading the life and dying the death his own poor mother had, and all that evening Phil sat very still in a corner by the fire, holding his little love's hand, and staring dreamily into the embers, trying to find out a "better line" for himself than street-tumbling.

He used to be puzzling at it night and day, and the more he puzzled and thought the more ambitious he became.

He had floating ideas of himself as a clown in a circus, a great acrobat in the music-hall, and a harlequin in a pantomime, drawing no end of money, and making his father, Tom Brown, and Jennie as happy as the day was long. There was to be no more poverty, no more hunger, no more trudging the streets, and collecting the revenue from hard-hearted sight-seers; Moggs, Brown, and himself were to be gentlemen, and walk abroad in tail-coats and broadcloth trousers, thick polished boots, and chimney-pot hats, and Jennie was to be a lady, and wear a real silk gown, a gold brooch, and long gold earrings, and they were all to have pudding every day in the week, Sunday not omitted, and be happy and jolly accordingly.

They were wonderful dreams that floated through the boy's brain, and he told them all to his faithful sweetheart, who believed in them as though they had been gospel truths. And it really seemed at last as though the good time was going to begin, for Tom Brown came home with news which made Phil's heart leap in his bosom, and sent a thrill of excitement through Moggs' frame.

And this was the news. Phil and Moggs and Jennie were all to go on the morrow to the theatre where Tom worked, to be engaged for the Christmas Pantomime, and they went and were taken on. Jennie to dance in a a fairy ballet, and Moggs and Phil to play their acrobatic tricks in a sham street on the stage.

They were announced in the bills as Moggs and his wonderful monkey, and were forbidden by the manager to play any more in the streets, but were put on half salaries at once, and so were able to rehearse in their attic to their heart's content.

They got up a good many new tricks, and Moggs thought they would be quite a success when they came out; and Phil was sure his dreams were coming true, and that they were on the high road to fortune and fame.

The eventful night came at last, and after a hard day's rehearsal the two men and the two lovers set off for the theatre.

Phil and Jennie walked hand in hand, Jennie full of fun, but Phil very quiet and thoughtful.

His head ached a little, he said, but it would be all right when he began to act.

They soon reached the place, and, hurrying in, dressed for their parts: Jennie in white and pink and gold, with butterfly wings, Moggs in a splendid spangled suit, and Phil in a complete monkey-skin, which covered all his beauty, except the bright eyes laughing through the holes in the mask.

He was mightily applauded when he came on, and the people shouted with laughter at his odd tricks, and he began quite to feel as though he was a very popular actor indeed.

At last came a scene where he had to be let down in a swinging garland of roses, and perform some of his choicest tricks with his father.

"Hold hard, Phil," said Tom Brown as he lowered him steadily and carefully from the flies. "Don't look down."

But Phil did, he couldn't help it. He saw his father and Jennie looking up at him, he saw the glitter of the footlights, and then—he grew sick, and he never knew how, but he fell, and struck his head heavily against the corner of the scene. And when the screaming people looked again there was blood flowing from under the monkey mask, and blood on the spangled dress of the tumbler, who had picked up the lad, and was crying out that his dear boy was dead, and blood too on the wings and skirts of a little fairy who held Phil's hand, and wept, as fairies are never supposed to weep.

Well, they took the poor little broken monkey into the green-room, and a doctor came and examined him, but it was all of no use, for Phil just opened his eyes and kissed his father and Tom Brown and Jennie, and whispered that he "meant to go in for a better line," he closed them again for ever, and Moggs was left to tumble on alone, the last of all his company. And he, poor man, being so lonely, and wretched, and very poor, tumbled into the workhouse, and very soon after into his grave; where he was forgotten by everyone but Tom and his daughter.

And Jennie grew up to be a lovely woman, and a great actress, and married a kind good husband, and had a little boy whom she named Phil, which plainly showed that she never forgot her first love, Moggs' Monkey.

In What Position to Sleep.

The man who is thoroughly fagged out, can sleep soundly in almost any position; but there is undoubtedly a choice of position, not only for the nervous and the invalid, but for the healthy and the strong. One writer recommends lying upon the back. The objection to this position is, that in certain morbid states of the brain the blood gravitates to the back of the head, and produces headache and troublesome dreams. Another writer strongly recommends lying prone upon the front of the body, and gives his reasons for choosing that position. But the weight of medical authority, common sense, and a knowledge of anatomy teach, that to lie upon the right side is the best, for in this position the food gravitates more easily out of the stomach into the intestines, and the weight of the liver, a pretty large and heavy organ, does not rest upon other internal organs.

Jeweled Garters.

The fashion of wearing jeweled garters has spread so rapidly that jewelers all keep the article in stock. They are very expensive. A member of a conspicuous New York firm explains to a reporter of The Sun: "The rage is recent, but none the less strong, and it promises to spread indefinitely, as the range is as unlimited as the purse. All the prominent society women and many who are not in society wear them. You see, women constitutionally delight in pretty things, and their adornment is of more interest and enjoyment to them than anything else. If you will come downstairs I'll show you the stock."

There was a show-case full of them, each pair mounted in a velvet box. The pattern was the same in all as far as the band was concerned. The band was a full inch wide, made of fine elastic and covered with beautifully-woven silk of every conceivable shade, pale blues and warm reds predominating. They are designed to match the tint of the dress worn with them. In one case two heart-shaped clasps of colored gold, inlaid with cross-bars of turquoises and pearls, joined the ends of a scarlet band with little frills of silk along the edges. The price was $100. A pair with two oval clasps of hammered gold, perhaps an inch in length, could be bought for $48, while the cheapest pair, with plain gold clasps, was $16.

"It's a curious fact," said the jeweler, "that the cheap ones won't sell. When a customer wants an elegant garter, he—I mean she—is willing to pay for it."

A pair that cost $225 had two shields with three big pearls in each and little diamonds at the edges. Another pair was expensive through its delicate lace, which was arranged in a fluffy bow-knot, with two little gold disks clasping in the center.

At another establishment the jeweler said:

"The majority of them are made to order. Your visit is opportune, as I have just finished the most expensive pair that ever left my factory. The price is $1,200." In this the lace and pearl-colored silk band were joined by an elaborate clasp. On one side was the lady's monogram in pearls; on the other the coat-of-arms, with frosted storks' head, a crest of delicately carved gold, and a motto set in chip diamonds. It was a present from a mother to her daughter, who is to be married soon.

"Has the demand for such garters increased?"

The Arctic Whaling Fleet.

The twenty or more whale ships which came down from the Arctic last autumn have mostly started again for the same destination. These vessels will not arrive in the Arctic before some time in May. They fish by the way, making long stretches out of a direct course, sometimes getting well over toward Japan and sometimes nosing about the Okhotsk Sea, for any chance to see a few whales in this latitude. Besides the fleet of sailing ships, there will be three steamers in the Arctic this season, viz: The Belvedere and North Star, of New Bedford, and the new steamer now on the stocks at this port, which will be completed inside of the next two months. The sailing ships are all old-fashioned, short, oak built ships, which have done good service in other business before they were sent around to the Arctic.—Some of them were packets fifty years ago. They are still strong, weatherly ships, and seem to be independent of all decay. The cold weather of the Arctic and the saturation of oil have a tendency to preserve ships. Unless these oil vessels get nipped in the ice, they may be good for at least a quarter of a century more of good service. By that time there will be no use for anything but the screw steamship in whaling. Even now another use of steam in whaling has been introduced—the steam tender or small boat with steam, strong enough to tow a dead whale a long distance and tow the whale boats to the fishing-ground. Steam cannot be used in following whales, on account of the noise. But it can be used as an auxiliary in the ways suggested, and, it is said, with substantial advantage. A great many whales are struck and lost. But a steam tender to hitch on and tow thirty or forty miles is the latest improvement in whaling. The old sailing vessels will wear out in the business. They do not represent a great deal of capital. Now and then an old ship worth $5,000 or $6,000, and twice that sum in the matter of outfit, will come into port with 1,000 barrels of oil, and as much bone as can be stored away.—The interest on capital is small. The profits are large. That is why these old bluff-bowed ships soaked with whale oil, are so dear to the hearts of their owners. The steam whaler with outfit costs anywhere from $70,000 to $120,000, according to size. These must come into port with large fares, or the venture would be a losing business.—San Francisco Bulletin.

The Earliest Ploughman.

The steel or iron plough-share is one of the most valuable of modern inventions, and has both lightened the farmer's labors and added largely to his wealth. But Mr. Darwin has proved that worms do in a quiet but effective way the same work that the plough does on a larger scale. They break up the solid crust and enrich the surface by bringing the most valuable constituents from the sub-soil and forming a rich vegetable mould. The little piles left at the mouth of their holes are full of nutrition, and of the highest value for the growth of plants and vegetables.

The worms fill an important place among agricultural laborers. The smoothness of beautiful lawns and meadows, Mr. Darwin says, is "mainly due to all the inequalities having been slowly levelled by worms." The improvements which their industry effects are constant and progressive. The whole of the superficial mould over any expanse has passed, and will pass again, every few years through the bodies of worms. These despised articulates ought to be reckoned by the farmer among his most valuable allies.

College Songs.

College music is seldom original, old tunes being fitted to new words and pressed into service. Operatic airs are freely called upon, as in the case of the "Trumpet Song" from "I Puritani," which is frequently joined to the words of secret society songs, and sometimes to the Latin words of "Lauriger;" and such odd conjunctions as "Mary had a little lamb, shouting the battle cry of freedom," are not uncommon. The wearisome old "Greenville" is divorced from "Far from mortal cares retreating," and made almost tolerable with the words, "Saw my leg off, short," the two final notes of each strain of the tune being omitted. The "Menagerie has done good service. The "Derby Ram" and "Rings" are adaptations of old English school songs. The song of "Peter Gray" in its original shape was a serious song called "Pleasant Michigan," of which the last word in the refrain was lengthened to "Michigan-i-a-a-a." The burlesque "Vilkins and his Dinah," borrowed by some of the colleges from the old Bowery Theatre, was in like manner a rustic sentimental song of the old school, called "Sir William and Diana." "Springfield Mountain" was familiar in Western Massachusetts before the college boys took it up. The air to which Kirke White's hymn "When marshalled on the nightly plain" is usually sung has a singular effect when the words of the "Three Crows" are deaconed off to it, after the fashion of "Bohunkus." If there is any music in this country, outside of the well-worn Ethiopian melodies now out of fashion, which can be said to constitute a distinctively American school, perhaps there is none better entitled to be so reckoned than that composite product of the musical geniuses in the schools of America now known as college songs.

What Iowa Girls Are Taught.

At the Iowa agricultural college every girl in the junior class has learned to make good bread, weighing and measuring their ingredients, mixing, kneading, and baking and regulating her fire.—Each has also been taught to make yeast and to bake biscuits, puddings, pies, and cakes of various kinds; how to cook a roast, broil a steak and make a cup of coffee, how to stuff and roast a turkey, make oyster soup, prepare materials for other soups, steam and mash potatoes so that they will melt in the mouth; and, in short, to prepare a first-class meal, combining both substantial and fancy dishes, in good style. Theory and manual skill have gone hand in hand. Vast stores of learning have been accumulated in the arts of canning, preserving, and pickling fruits, and they have taken practical lessons in the details of household management, such as house-furnishing, care of beds and bedding, washing and ironing, care of the sick, etc. The girls, we are informed, are also thoroughly grounded in science, mathematics and English literature. If there is anything that challenges the unlimited respect and devotion of the masculine mind it is the ability in woman to manage well her own household.

"Now I See!"

So said the blind man after the Savior had healed him. Actual blindness is not easy to cure, although it is sometimes done. But remember that disease of the eyes often results from impure blood. If you have any reason to think that your bad eyes may have come from this cause, lose not an hour of time in buying a bottle of Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy," which will cost you only one dollar, and take it to cleanse your blood. You can implicitly trust it to do this. Or drop a line to Dr. David Kennedy, Roundout, N. Y. State your case fully and get the Doctor's opinion free.

A Remarkable Offer.

The yearly subscription to the HERALD is $1.50. The yearly subscription to the FARMER'S REVIEW of Chicago, which, by the way is the best agricultural paper in the northwest, is also $1.50. We will furnish both papers to new subscribers for nine months at $1.50, just half the regular price of the two for a whole year. Persons receiving the Review will also get free a copy of the chart entitled the "Agricultural Products of the World," which was issued as a supplement to the Review of April 13th, and new subscribers to the HERALD will receive gratis a copy of our family receipt book entitled "The Home Guide." This offer will hold good for thirty days from this date—April 20, 1882. Send in your names, gentlemen.

A Traveler's Story.

After spending months at watering places and consulting the best physicians without benefit, I returned home disheartened and expected to die. A friend urged a trial of Parker's Ginger Tonic. Woman's Triumph

(From the Correspondent of the Kingston, N. Y. Freeman.)

The case of Mrs. Edward Myers, of Roundout, New York, furnishes an apt illustration of woman's power of endurance. This lady had been treated for months in the usual way for Erysipelas of the hand without benefit. Not until her hand had become a mass of putrified flesh did she turn to Dr. Kennedy proprietor of the "Favorite Remedy," for help.

He at once informed her that it was impossible to save the hand—it must be amputated. She received the terrible intelligence quietly, declined to take ether, stipulating merely to hold her husband's hand during the operation, and underwent the painful process without moving a muscle or uttering a groan. Dr. Kennedy then gave "Favorite Remedy" freely to cleanse the blood and prevent the return of the disease, and Mrs. Myers now lives and rejoices in her great deliverance.

"Favorite Remedy" is fast becoming a trusted household friend in all cases of Female Weakness and diseases of the blood. One dollar a bottle. Your druggist has it.

The latest place struck by the oil fever, which prevails to such an alarming extent in the New York southern tier, is Watkins. An extensive oil operator from Pennsylvania has been looking over the town, and gives his opinion that it is a promising place to sink an oil well.

A physician says that exposure pays a secondary role in the production of apoplexies, brain-softings and the like when compared with dissipation; that both in the higher and lower ranks of life, whilst work and worry count their victims by hundreds, dissipation counts its by thousands.

A cunning Spaniard named Emanuel Cortez, with many aliases, has at last been hunted down in New York and captured by Inspector Byrnes and three detectives. He has led the life of a criminal in America for twenty-five years, and has been in prison frequently. He is now held to answer to eighteen forgeries.

Mr. Christian K. Ross, father of the long-lost Charlie, is again looking for his boy. A boy has been found at Part's Road, Fla., who is said to be named Husted, and who is said to answer the description of Charlie. The police say he is the son of Mr. C. H. Husted, of Philadelphia, who is also claimed by a woman named Snyder.

While workingmen were engaged in pulling down the walls of the old city armory in Brooklyn, there fell from a cavity an hermetically sealed leaden box. It was found to have come from the corner-stone of the Apprentices' Library, built in 1825. In the box was an account of the laying of the corner-stone, as published in the Long Island Star. General LaFayette had charge of the ceremony.

Pauline Markham, in an interview, says: "We on the stage are like workers on tapestry—we see nothing but the wrong side. We are in the shadows, as it were, and however exhilarating a spectacle or burlesque may be from the chairs, it is not very heavenly from the wings, I can assure you. It has its fascinations, but a woman in that class of entertainment need never expect to pass through life without being talked about, and the more prominent her name the more exaggerated the stories told."

It is claimed in England that the universities themselves have long since abdicated their teaching functions. Most of the real teaching, it is said, is provided by the unauthorized and outside private tutors, who exist independently of the colleges, and have, in a great degree, superseded them. In too many cases the candidate for an ordinary degree, if he wish to pass, is compelled to make use of a private tutor. His college does, indeed, provide him with a certain number of lectures, but the number is usually quite inadequate, and even if it were greater in several instances the teaching provided is not nearly so well calculated for the needs of the pupil as is the better-arranged teaching of the private tutor.

Although the St. Gothard Tunnel has been opened, the hospital kept by the monks on the mountains has not been abandoned. During the coming winter the place will be in operation as heretofore. These monks have done noble service to many a poor traveler in the Alps in late years. During the past year alone their records show that no fewer than 15,730 persons found shelter within their doors; that 58,503 rations were distributed, that 3,956 lodgings were supplied; that 123 persons were attended as patients, and that a large quantity of clothing was given away to needy travelers.

Mercantile Economy.

Two or three years ago a Detroit wholesale house worked up a customer in the interior of the State who was known to be a cash down man, but who was at the same time rather queer, as they soon discovered. In filling his first order he claimed a shortage of six clothes-pins on a shipment of 100 dozen, and in the next he found a barrel of sugar three-quarters of a pound less than stated in the bill. This gave the firm a cue for future dealing with him, and every order was filled with the utmost care. Everything was all right for a few months, but then a slip gave him a chance to growl over a shortage of six ounces on the gross weight of a chest of tea, and from that time he had a complaint ready whenever an order has been filled. At length, the other day, he walked into the store in person, his face wearing a look of stern determination, and after the usual compliments he began:

"I called in to say that I shall deal no more with this house."

"Is that so? Haven't we always used you well?"

"No, sir, you haven't! There's too much shortage."

"But we have always allowed it."

"Yes, but it's a great deal of bother to have to keep track of it and write you."

"Anything short in that last order?"

"Yes. The cinnamon was short, the handle of one broom was broken, and one of the pails had an ear knocked off."

"Well, we'll allow fifty cents on that. We'll always do the fair thing."

"Say sixty cents."

"Well, make it sixty. Any other complaint?"

"N—o, I guess not, but I want to tell you fair and square that the very next time you send me another barrel of molasses which is short a whole pint, I'm going to transfer my custom to a firm which gives dead weight and full measure. Have you got any coffee which is put up in sacks that will make a bed-quilt good enough for children?"—Detroit Free Press.

The spring clip of California wool is now coming forward quite freely, and a large business is anticipated. The product for the past twelve years is given at 466,906,700 pounds, showing a value of $86,861,700. The largest product was in 1876, agregating 56,550,000 lbs. Two years later it was only 41,402,000. It was then 46,000,000 pounds for two years, and last year it was 43,000,000 pounds.

THE WALTER A. WOOD HARVESTING MACHINES

Take the Lead.

In 1853, 500 Machines were sold.
In 1881, 40,413 were sold, and
47,000 have been ordered for 1882.

But the NE PLUS ULTRA of Harvesting Machinery is the Wood Twine Binder. This machine was first put upon the market in 1880, and 4,184 machines were sold that year. In 1881, the sales swelled to 10,034, and orders for over 12,000 have already been received for 1882.

THE WOOD TWINE BINDER!

Possesses these special points of excellence:

1—It is the most perfect automatic self binder ever made.
2—It effects a positive separation of the bound from the unbound grain.
3—The sheaf is formed and compressed without any strain on the twine until the knot is tied.
4—The grain is straightened by the action of the packer as it enters the binder.
5—The automatic uniform sizing of the bundle, thus relieving the driver of the care of stopping and starting the binder.

Last year's machines proved such a perfect success that they will be built substantially the same for 1882, with such improvements in minor details as may be found necessary.

Every farmer desiring to buy a self binder should examine the Wood Twine Binder before purchasing.

THE DUBLIN ASSASSINATION.

Political assassinations are multiplying to an alarming extent. England and the civilized world has been shocked by the cowardly murder of Lord Frederick Cavendish, the late appointed Chief Secretary of Ireland, and Mr. Burke, the Assistant Secretary. The two men were waylaid while walking together Saturday afternoon in Phœnix Park, Dublin, by four ruffians, stabbed to death and left to die. The details are peculiarly revolting, and the deed causes more indignation from the fact that the new Chief Secretary, Lord Cavendish, was the representative of the conciliatory policy recently adopted by the Government. He was butchered with the olive branch in hand. The most intense excitement prevails throughout the United Kingdom, and vigorous measures have been taken by the police authorities to detect the assassins. The Land League has issued a manifesto denouncing the crime in the strongest terms, and public meetings have been held throughout Ireland for the same purpose. The manifesto, which is signed by Parnell, Dillon, and Davitt, says:

TO THE PEOPLE OF IRELAND:—On the eve of what seemed a bright future for our country, that evil destiny which has apparently pursued us for centuries has struck at our hopes another blow which cannot be exaggerated in its disastrous consequences. In this hour of sorrowful gloom we venture to give expression to our profoundest sympathy with the people of Ireland in the calamity that has befallen our cause through this horrible deed and with those who determined, at the last hour, that a policy of conciliation should supplant that of terrorism and national distrust. We earnestly hope that the attitude and action of the Irish people will show to the world that an assassination such as has startled us almost to the abandonment of hope of our country's future is deeply and religiously abhorrent to their every feeling and instinct. We feel that no act that has ever been perpetrated in our country during the exciting struggles of the past fifty years has so stained the name of hospitable Ireland as this cowardly and unprovoked assassination of a friendly stranger, and that until the murderers of Cavendish and Burke are brought to justice that stain will sully our country's name.

"To the Land League of America:—The execrable and cowardly assassination of Lord Frederick Cavendish, the newly appointed Chief Secretary for Ireland, and Under-Secretary Burke, has horrified the world, and is especially painful and abhorent to every true friend of Ireland. We denounce the awful crime and exhort our brethren in Ireland to use every effort to bring its perpetrators to justice and to show their detestation of the fiendish act, which only an arch enemy of our race or some irresponsible idiot could have conceived or executed.

Whoever the murderers were they must have been backed by some sort of organization. Lord Frederick arrived in Ireland the Friday evening previous. The inaugural ceremonies were held on Saturday, but a few hours before his assassination. The four men who committed the bloody deed must have been on the look out for Lord Frederick during the entire day. The act was done in a public place, in broad day light, and but a few yards distance from the residence of one of the victims. It may have been deliberately planned by men who feared the success of a policy of conciliation. The Boston Globe, the organ of the Land League in that city, has these comments on the affair.

Nihilism has invaded Ireland. An agitation which rested on a high moral basis and challenged the respect of the civilized world by the fairness and constitutionality of its methods has been arrested by the cowardly blow of an assassin. The dagger and bludgeon have been brought in to complicate the relations between two races which had reached a settlement of existing differences by civilized methods. The man who struck down Lord Frederick Cavendish is a conspirator against Ireland. The dagger which pierced the new Secretary's body dealt a blow to Irish progress. The duty of the Land League at home and in the United States is plain and simple. It must denounce assassinations openly and earnestly. It must give assistance to the authorities in hunting down butchers and bringing them to speedy justice. It must proclaim its freedom from any connection with men who would use assassination as a political weapon.

LETTER FROM NEW MEXICO.

FAIRVIEW, N. M., April 13, '82.

Since leaving Lenawee I have not been able to fulfil my many promises to write to friends at home. If you will grant me space I shall endeavor to give you all some idea of my surroundings, of my work, and of the country generally. I hope my friends will regard this as a personal letter and reply accordingly.

This is a strange country to me, so different in physical features, climate, productions and people from what I have been accustomed to "back in the States." To one inexperienced in camp life, tenting out has a novelty scarcely less pleasing than are the feelings awakened by the first sight of snow-capped mountains. I am rapidly becoming accustomed to breathing rare air having fallen into the ways of camp life without effort, and my face and hands have already the dark tan color of a Mexican greaser. My tongue has mastered a few Mexican expressions, and the prospect is that I shall soon be thoroughly Mexicanized.

Our party is well supplied with everything necessary for conducting a railroad survey in a country like this. We have six tents 12 by 14, and two of these put end to end form the office.—One is used as a sleeping room and the other as a work room. If you wish, walk in and let me show you about.—Here in one corner are piled some boxes containing paper, blank-books and other stationery. Along one side extends the drafting table, 8 feet long by 3 feet wide, made of pine boards planed on one side and, resting on benches of a proper height. In the farther end of the tent is a large chest and beyond it a gun box in front of a stove, for all the tents have box stoves. In the bedroom beyond you will find four beds occupied by the chief of the party, Mr. Wells, his draughtsman, topographer and myself. In one corner are the wash basins, water pail, cups and soap. Our beds are made of hay, on which is spread a 12x7 canvas wagon cover doubled together, on which are spread two army blankets and a buffalo robe. The wagon cover is then doubled over the whole to keep off the dust. When we move the bed is rolled up in the wagon cover, tied with ropes and loaded with the tents. Two other tents are used by the boys, the remaining two are joined to form a kitchen and dining hall. Our tables are of pine boards, and napkins, tablecloths, and china dishes are always absent. We eat from tin plates and drink from tin cups. As a general thing we live well, though sometimes our stock of provisions gets to a low ebb. We are very fortunate in having a good cook; and but once or twice in my life have I eaten better bread than he makes. Potatoes, rice, oatmeal, corn meal, fresh beef, ham, good butter, pickles, tea, coffee, condensed milk, and a variety of canned fruits constitute our bill of fare when living on the top shelf.

There are three wagons in camp with ten horses and four mules. Two of the horses are used for the saddle, the remaining animals making three teams. Two of the wagons are kept on the road drawing provisions for men and animals from Engle; the other one is used on the line. Our hour of rising is 7 o'clock on week days, but on Sundays we rise later, as regular work is then suspended. So far as my experience goes every day is esteemed alike by most people in this territory. We breakfast at half-past seven and then prepare for work. Tim, the driver, hitches his four fine mules to the wagon, axes, rods, stakes, guns, etc., put in, the dinner box not being forgotten, and with a crack of the whip we are off. Spring seats are a necessity for such roads as we have here.

The proposed line follows up a creek called the Cuchillo Negro, which twists and turns in snake like coils along its course among the mountains. We cross this small rapid stream in some parts as often as a dozen times in a mile. At such crossings the bank on either side is often so steep that we go into the water at a 45° pitch and up the opposite side on a simular slope. The creek crossings however are not the worst places on the road. The field party consists of our chief, a transit man, a leveler and his rod man, two chain men, an axe man, a man to mark and drive stakes, and a back-flag man. In addition to these, while working in the canons, we have had two guards stationed on the mountains, one on either side to watch for "Injuns." The line is now being located, a preliminary survey having already been made. In running a distance of 47 miles there are 16 miles of curves and 3 miles of bridging. In one place a tunnel of 300 feet is necessary. In some places the curves follow each other in such close succession that there is often not more than 50 feet tangent between them.—Our present elevation is 6500 feet or about as high as Mt. Washington.—The rariety of the air caused me some difficulty in breathing at first—quick exertion putting me entirely out of breath. The weather has been fine ever since I joined the party until today when a heavy fall of snow keeps us in our tents. I am beginning to realize that this is as much the "sunny south" as it is the "far west." At this altitude the nights are always cool even in midsummer, and now water freezes in our tents during the nights. In the middle of the day, however, it warms up and were it not for the cool breeze that is always blowing from the snow caps of the Black Range the heat would be intense. Our latitude is about 33° 15' north, and the sun seems as high in the heavens now as it will be in Michigan two months later. This would be a fine place to locate an observatory, the cool, clear nights being highly favorable for star-gazing, and many a time have I wished that the telescope of Raisin Valley Seminary was here at my command. The rainy season does not set in here till June, but we can frequently see snow storms raging around the peaks of the main range which lies some 20 miles to the west of us.

This part of New Mexico is very rough and mountainous, but in some parts there are extensive plains. The country is too dry to be farmed except along the streams where the land can be irrigated. In the Mexican town of Cuchillo, where I staid one night on my way to camp, farming by irrigation was carried on quite extensively. Farmers were then plowing their patches for spring crops. After plowing the soil is thrown up so as to divide the ground into squares. Into these squares water is let, at the will of the owner, from a stream brought down along the upper side of their patches by tapping the Cuchillo Negro creek, about 8 miles above the town. This stream is conducted thro' the centre of the town, a great convenience, for besides supplying the natives with water for drinking and cooking, the stream is a capital place for the Mexican hogs to cool off in, and in which his geese can dabble.—The houses in this town like nearly all buildings in this country, are made of adobe, that is, of sun-dried brick.—The roofs are flat, being made by covering the house with poles, then with a thick layer of dirt.

I am told that the hills and mountain slopes become covered with grass after the rainy season sets in, furnishing excellent pasturage for stock, but what cattle get to eat at this season of the year is a mystery to me, there being nothing green but the trees, the cactus and the soapweed. I would not advise any of my friends to take up a ranche in New Mexico. Wild animals are few; I have yet to see a dear or a bear, although there are some in the mountains. Crows, hawks and sand-hill-cranes are seen in the canons, and now and then a duck or a Mexican quail. The redeeming features of New Mexico are the rich mines of silver, copper, lead and coal that are within its borders. We are now in the mining district of the Black Range, and frequently hear the report of blasts. Near here are the Ivanhoe, in which Bob Ingersoll is interested, the Garfield, the Colossal, the Rifle Shot and many others, most of which have been recently opened, and are said to be "panning out" rich ore.—When the road which we are locating is constructed, the mining industry will receive a fresh impulse. There are four mining towns within a circuit of 8 miles, Chloride, Grafton, Robinson and Fairview. We are now camped near Fairview, but shall move on towards Robinson, the largest of the four, in a few days.

We have been following up a famous Indian trail for many miles. On my way to camp the driver stopped the team to show me some wonderful Indian paintings on the side of a canon, and near our last camp were two places where the Indians had scratched or carved in the rocks rude pictures of men and animals. One of the pictures was apparently intended to represent a scene where the soul of an Indian was taking its flight to the "happy hunting ground"; the other represents a fight between an Indian and a buffalo, in which the Indian had been tossed high in the air. I took a copy of these two pictures and hope sometime to show them to my friends. Frequently we find stones with bowl shapped cavities in them where the Indian squaw ground her corn and rice. The summits of almost all the hills are covered with the ruins of rude stone houses, and chippings of obsidian left from the manufacture of arrow points. Until within a few years the Indians have occupied this country, and they are liable at any time to make a raid into it.—Only last summer they came up these canons on the war path. We have had one scare the past month, but after six of us had stood guard all of one night we learned that there were no Indians within a hundred miles of us. However we are not without danger from them for they have made raids into this country in the past and may possibly do so again. But we do not anticipate any trouble from them and are well armed and watchful.

April 16.—I have just been taking a horseback ride on a mule. The topographer and I rode 18 miles, and I beheld the grandest scenery that has yet gladdened my eyes and soul. It was too grand for description. Let me hear from you all. F. MORLEY.

SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.

Prospect of an Interesting Meeting of the State Sunday School Union in this Village in June.

The annual meeting of the Michigan State Sunday School Union is to occur in Tecumseh, June 13, 14 and 15, 1882. The pastors, Sunday school officers and teachers of this village are a local committee on arrangements. A preliminary meeting was recently held and a few general arrangements made. The opera house has been secured for the occasion and the management of the singing intrusted to Mr. J. S. Strong, Dr. B. F. Steinhoff and Dr. R. B. House. The several superintendents and their assistants are appointed as a general committee on entertainment.

The meeting in June is without doubt to be an unusually interesting one. Rev. R. S. Pardington is chairman of the state executive committee, and from him I learn that we shall have the privilege of hearing two of the greatest S. S. men of this, or any other land, viz: J. H. Vincent of New York, and B. F. Jacobs of Chicago. The address of welcome will be delivered by Rev. C. E. Conley, and response by the president of the union, Rev. J. W. Ford of Bay City. J. W. Hough and L. Kirtly of Jackson, and most of the leading S. S. men of the state will be present. The attendance from abroad will undoubtedly be large and it will be necessary to make large preparations. L. G. NORTH, Sec.

The meeting held last Monday evening to perfect arrangements was well attended. The secretary of the meeting has furnished us with the minutes of the same, which will show the character of the business transacted.

The teachers and officers of the various Sunday Schools met at the M. E. church to complete arrangements for the state S. S. convention. Rev. R. S. Pardington was called to the chair and C. E. Conley appointed secretary.

Rev. R. S. Pardington reported that in harmony with the state executive committee, the opera house had been chartered for the meetings.

Voted that a committee of seven be appointed to decorate the hall with flowers, flags etc., viz: Miss Hattie Stevens, Mrs. Chas. Slayton, Mrs. Crosby, Mrs. O. B. DeWolf, Mrs. Keyser, P. S. McKinnon and C. L. Albaugh. The committee was authorized to fill all vacancies.

Chas. Slayton was appointed as local treasurer.

Voted that the Superintendents of the three Sunday Schools be appointed a committee to secure ushers and pages.

Dr. L. G. North was elected chairman of committee on entertainment, and P. S. McKinnon secretary.

Adjourned to the call of the chairman of committee on entertainment.

LAST week Uncle Luke Wood was stricken with a stroke of paralysis which left him totally blind. He rallied for a few days but Tuesday night began to fail and died yesterday morning about half past ten. Every one who knew Uncle Luke loved and respected him, and we all sorrowfully say Tecumseh has lost one of her best men.

Old Folks' Concert.

The old folks' concert Tuesday evening was quite a success both financially and otherwise. The Broom Brigade drill under the efficient instruction and command of Mrs. A. D. Lawrence was a perfect success, and we think she commanded the best drilled company that ever obeyed a command in Tecumseh. Their proficiency was a perfect surprise to every one, and the ladies can safely say that Tecumseh has the best Broom Brigade in Michigan.

The old folks' singing was good, but would have been appreciated much better by the audience had half the pieces been reserved for some future occasion. The male quartette was wonderful—Perry Hosmer's soprano was heart-rending and pathetic, Mr. John Heck, as basso profundo, executed his part to the delight of the small boys and girls from Adrian, the first basso by Mr. Cotton did credit to the mercantile interests of our village, while Jehiel's sonorous tenor resounded on one note throughout the entire selection.

J. W. PATTERSON has purchased the two stores of his brother William, which are now occupied by J. A. Eaton & Co., Miss M. C. Dingman and the Tupper shoe stock, and the 1st day of June will commence repairs. We interviewed Mr. Patterson this morning and asked him what he was going to do. He said, "That is impossible for me to say, but I shall at least put on a new roof, raise the ceilings, put in a plate front, and make one of the best blocks in town." This will necesitate a removal of the stocks in the stores very soon.

IT was known to a few of the friends of Rev. R. S. Pardington to whom he preaches in the Raisin M. E. church that Saturday, May 6th, was his natal day, whereupon they planned a surprise visit which was a genuine surprise to him. They came bringing their good things with them and were met by two or three here—and fairly captured his home. His good wife knew all about it in advance and succeeded in keeping her "gude man" at home. The tables were spread and literally groaned beneath the weight of chicken, biscuit, cake and fruit.—After all had eaten, the ladies presented the pastor with a beautiful bed-quilt, and the gentlemen presented his wife with a purse of money.—Whereupon surprise remarks were made, and after a social time they departed leaving kind wishes for the family, and the family sending many thanks and good wishes after them.—Job said "Cursed be the day in which I was born." The pastor only regretted that his natal day did not occur oftener.

"BETTER late than never" is an old saying, but in offering a reward for Tom Navin, it is hardly a true one. Having allowed him abundance of time in which to make good his escape, the eleventh hour action of the Adrian Council strikes the outsider as a good deal of a farce.

A SPECIAL election was held in Hudson last Monday to choose one trustee to a vacancy in the village council. The issue of paving a portion of Main street was involved, and the election was a very hot one, 426 votes being polled. The candidate who favored the paving project was elected by a majority of 28.

THE Christian at Work has an item which would not be inappropriate to this latitude:

Last Sunday evening a Boston divine suddenly paused somewhere near the end of his sermon and said: "We would be glad if that young man in the vestibule would come inside and satisfy himself whether she is here or not. That would be much better than keeping a half-inch draft on the occupants of the back pew."

WE dropped in to see John Ed McCollum in Silvers' Clinton store Saturday, and while there asked what the prospect for this season's business was. He says everything looks favorable. They have a larger stock of goods than ever before in the spring and are selling them every day. Their stock is one of the best selected in the county, and Silvers holds a good trade from all over this section of the county.

MR. J. F. LAWRENCE, a promising young attorney of Ann Arbor, was in town on Monday on business and remained over the next day. Mr. Lawrence rarely visits our village, but during his brief stay here he made an excellent impression upon the attorneys of the place.

DR. J. F. JENKINS has been adding a new porch to his already commodious residence, and he now has one of the finest dwellings in town. The location is just right for a man in his profession and he seems ready to lay out all that is necessary to improve the looks of Chicago street.

LAST Tuesday the boy in Wright's drug store went down cellar to draw some dryer. The cellar was quite dark and he lighted a match to see how full the measure was, but never found out. A spark dropped in the measure and in a second the whole business was ablaze. The boy threw on a pail of water which only made a bad matter worse, spreading the fire; and had it not been for the prompt action of John Orr a bad fire would have been unavoidable.

Clinton News: Daniel O'Reiley's egg wagon and its contents met with a sad mishap last Thursday. The team was left standing in front of Bell Mill's place, just west of town, and took a notion to run away. The wagon was tipped over, breaking both hind springs, and the eggs—well, words fail to depict their sad fate, and we draw a veil over the scene. The team continued on its mad course, and finally brought up on the porch of St. John's furniture store without very serious results to themselves or the porch.

DR. E. HAUSE has put up a new Japanese "T" sign in front of his store and the sign appropriately indicates what people can find inside. The Doctor's tea trade is booming right along. He keeps in stock a superior quality of Young Hyson, the best brand of Oolong, a good quality of Gunpowder, three grades of Japan, a fine brand of English breakfast, and a good Imperial. These several grades are kept constantly in stock, and prices are very modest, when the quality of the goods is taken into consideration. Mr. Hause will hereafter make a specialty of his tea department. He also keeps the three grades of coffee, Mocha, Java and Rio, which are sold as low as the best quality of coffee can be afforded.

MY AMATEUR FARM.

THIRD WEEK.

"Patience." * * * have faith and thy prayer will be answered.—LONGFELLOW.

"Taint no use o' tryin' to make yourself too comfortable in dis world; you's got to change ke'ars at de grabe-yard.—J. A. MACON.

"Now then," said Columbus, as he pushed back his chair from the breakfast table on Monday morning, "this week's business is makin' fences, and that's where I feel to hum. I've made miles'n miles o' fences over'n Canada. My father was a post-hole digger by trade, and my father'n-law was a ship carpenter. I was apprenticed for three years in my boyhood to a stun mason, and my wife was brought up in a nursery. So you see my schooling in the line o' fence makin' could'nt be beat. I've made board fences and picket fences, rail fences and stun fences, hedge fences and tree fences, wire fences and stump fences, and fences out o' Canada thistles. Makin' fences, my dear sir, is one o' the fine arts. I never seen a Yankee yet who knew beans about makin' a fence. In the first place you must have a good foundation to build your fence on. You can't build a decent fence through a tamarack swamp or across a frog pond. A good clover sod growin' upon a sandy loam, with a gravel sub-soil, is the best soil to plant a fence on. In the next place you must have the proper material to build a fence with, and this depends entirely on the latitude where you're goin' to make the fence. I made ten miles of stump fence on one man's farm in the season of 1849, but stumps would cost you more'n they'd come to. You might buy 'em by the car load up in the pineries at a fair price, but freight is awful high now. Besides its a very particular job to lay 'em properly and I doubt whether they'd make as good lookin' a fence as rails for your front corner. In sections where you can beg or borrow evergreen trees, hedges can be grown, but you can't grow a hedge in one season except with Canada thistles. Takin' into account cheapness, ease of construction and serviceableness, a Canada thistle hedge beats 'em all. They will turn man, dog or a porcupine everytime. They are easy to keep in repair. The posts don't rot off, nor the boards don't get loose. But somehow there seems to be a great prejudice agin' 'em over here in the States. In the third place you must have proper tools to work with. A post hole augur is just the thing to build a board fence with, but it aint worth shucks to make a stun fence. For a fust class hedge, a peck of genuine thistle seed is the best preliminary tool I know of. But the best fence for you is a snake rail fence. You have lots of old rail timber on the farm, and you can borrow several wagon loads of the neighbors. To make over your fences in apple-pie order, I shall want a sledge hammer, a good axe, fifty pounds of fence wire, a pair of patent japanned, double-ender, spring-back pincers and wire cutters, and a good stout boy to carry rails." I was amazed at Ichabod's learning on the subject of fences, and cheerfully assented to purchasing the necessary tools. It was understood without further parley that the week should be devoted to rebuilding the fences on the farm; the journal shows with what success.

Monday, April 18th.—Columbus pulled down the rail fence on neighbor Barnes' line preparatory to rebuilding. Cut off the burdock tops in the old fence row, and made a poison consisting of pork brine, carbolic acid, arsenic and Paris green, to kill the roots with.

Tuesday, April 19th.—Columbus drew a load of round wood in the forenoon. His wife wanted to bake some biscuit and make a bread pudding for dinner, but could'nt for the wood was all out. In the afternoon, he took down the fence between meadow and pasture lot to rebuild. A fine spring lamb died. It dropped through a hole in the barn floor and hung by the neck until it was dead.

Wednesday, April 20th.—Columbus tore down the fence on neighbor Dutton's line and drew gravel to fill up the woodchuck holes.

Thursday, April 21st.—Columbus took down the rail fence between the meadow and wheat lot. Another lamb died to-day. Its lungs seemed weak, and it ran out of breath.

Friday, April 22d.—Columbus drew rails from the front door yard to fill out with on the Barnes line. Went down town for beetle, fence wire, and cutters. When he returned he found the cows in Dutton's wheat field. Old brindle had lifted the barnyard gate off the hinges and they had free range then as the fences were all down. Ten fine young pigs kicked the bucket this afternoon. The poison which Ichabod had concocted for the burdock roots was poured by mistake into the swill barrel and given to the pigs for dinner. A vigorous application of a stomach pump saved the mother, but the sleek little porkers all went over the bay. Neighbor Heckenlooper's horse got loose, walked over, the place where the road fence ought to be and pastured himself on my wheat all the afternoon.

Saturday, April 23d.—Columbus had the rheumatism to-day, but he sawed and split enough wood to last over Sunday. Neighbor Dutton sent in a bill of $25 damage done to his wheat field by my cattle, yesterday. I sent back word to Dutton to go to h—eckenlooper and turn my damages with him.

When Saturday's sun had set I confess I had the blues. But a still small voice whispered in my ear: "Keep a stiff upper lip, Consider, keep a stiff upper lip. Only have faith and your ambition will yet be satisfied.

MR. M. B. COWLES, General Contracting Agent for the Maybury, Pullman & Hamilton Circus and Menagerie called this morning to announce that arrangements have been made for the appearance of the above show on Saturday, May 27th. The circus travels by rail and is one of the largest and most complete establishments run on the road. Look out for the big ad. next week.

The Willow as a Timber-Tree.

And there are some trees which are deserving of more attention than has yet been given them in this country. The willows, for instance, have seldom been cultivated in a large way; and yet there are few trees so easily grown, or which will pay better for cultivation. They adapt themselves to a wide range of soil and climate. They grow on high ground and on gravelly soils not less than by the sides of streams, where we most commonly see them. They are of rapid growth and yield a large return. The osier-willow is specially useful, we know, for the manufacture of baskets, chairs, [illegible] import it to the extent of $5,000,000 annually, when we might produce it easily in almost any part of our country. We hardly think of the willow as a timber-tree, or for the production of lumber, but only as yielding a cheap, poor sort of fuel. But in England the wood is greatly prized for many purposes. While it is light it is also tough; it does not break into slivers. Hardly any wood is so good, therefore, for the linings of carts and wagons used in drawing stone or other rough and heavy articles. It makes excellent charcoal, especially for the manufacture of gunpowder. It bears exposure to the weather, and boards made of it are very serviceable for fences. Some species of it are admirable for use as a live fence or hedge. On account of its comparative incombustibility, the willow is eminently useful for the floors of buildings designed to be fire-proof. It grows to a large size and furnishes a great amount of lumber. There is a white willow growing in Stockbridge, Mass., which, at four feet from the ground, measures twenty-two feet in circumference, and extends its branches fifty feet in every direction. Tradition says it was brought from Connecticut in 1807, by a traveler, who used it as a riding-switch. Hon. Jesse W. Fell, in giving an account of experiments in tree-planting, on an extensive scale, in Illinois, says: "Were I called upon to designate one tree which, more than all others, I would recommend for general planting, I would say unhesitatingly it should be the white willow." Professor Brewer says: "In England, where it is often sixty or seventy feet high in twenty years, there is no wood in greater demand than good willow. It is light, very tough, soft, takes a good finish, will bear more pounding and knocks than any other wood grown there, and hence its use for cricket-bats, for floats to paddle-wheels of steamers, and brake-blocks on cars. It is used extensively for turning, planking coasting-vessels, furniture, ox-yokes, wooden legs, shoe-lasts, etc." Fuller says, "It groweth incredibly fast—it being a by word that the profit by willows will buy the owners a horse before that by other trees will pay for the saddle." The basket-willow, well cultivated, will yield a net income of $150 a year to the acre. On the whole, therefore, it would seem that the various kinds of willow the economic value of which has been hitherto entirely overlooked in our country, are eminently deserving of attention, and will amply reward those who cultivate them.—From "Methods and Profit of Tree-Planting," by N. H. Egleston, in Popular Science Monthly.

Formation of the Storms in the Mississippi Valley.

In the season of hot weather in the central part of the Mississippi valley there often come successions of days when the atmosphere is not stirred by the winds, but remains as still as the air of a cave. Despite the steady gain in the heat, the sky stays cloudless, or at most is flecked by those light clouds that lie five miles or more above the surface of the earth. All nature seems cowed beneath the fervent heat, yet there is nothing of distinct portent in earth or air. At last, toward evening there may be seen a sudden curdling of the western sky; in a few minutes the clouds gather, coming from nowhere, growing at once in the lurid air. In less than half an hour the forces of the storm are organized, and its dreadful advance begins. If we were just beneath the gathering clouds we should find that the air over a space a mile or so in diameter was spinning around in a great whirlpool, and, while the revolving mass slowly advanced, the central part moved rapidly upwards. Beginning slowly, all the movements of the storm, the whirling action, the vertical streaming of the air, its onward movement, all gain speed of motion with astonishing rapidity. In a minute or two some cubic miles of air are in a state of intense gyratory movement, mounting upward as violently as the gases over a volcano. To replace this strong, whirling uprush, there is an indraught from every side towards the center of the whirlwind; and, as the center moves quickly forward, the rush of air is strongest from behind towards the advancing hurricane. The rate at which the storm goes forward is very variable, though it is generally as much as forty to 100 miles an hour, but this is not the measure of its destructive power. The rending effect of the storm is much greater than would be given by a simple blast of air moving at this speed. Much of this peculiar capacity for destruction may perhaps be due to the gyratory motion of the wind in the storm center, which on one side of the whirlwind adds the speed arising from its circular movement to the translatory velocity of the whirlwind itself. Some of the records tell us that houses with closed windows have been known to burst apart, as if from an explosion of gunpowder, while others that had their doors and windows wide open, remained essentially unharmed. It has been conjectured that this action may be due to a sudden rarefaction of the air on the outside of the building; but this cause cannot be sufficient to produce such effects, and if such explosions occur the cause must be looked for elsewhere.—After the storm is once developed, it seems very quickly to acquire its maximum of destructive power and its speed of translation. At the outset and during the period of most efficient action the strip of country affected is generally very narrow, not often exceeding a mile in width; as the storm advances the path seems gradually to grow wider, and the gyratory movement, as well as the translatory motion of the meteor loss considerable, until at last it fades into an ordinary thunder-storm or dies into a calm.

Dan Rice.

How He Tells the Story of His Game of Poker With Napoleon III.

In 1855 I was a race-rider off Long Island, N. Y., for John C. Stevens. Isaac Vanleer was the trainer. After exercising Dosoras, a 4-year old, and giving him a big sweat, he showed lameness. He was entered for a post stake, a single dash of two miles. Vanleer sent me on horseback to New York with a letter to Mr. Stevens, giving him full particulars of the lameness, advising his [illegible] arrived in New York, dismounted in front of the Hotel de Paris, located, I think, at the corner of Broadway and Leonard street, inquired for and was shown up to Mr. Stevens' private parlor, where I found a party of the most distinguished gentlemen in New York, sitting around a table and playing a game of "draw." First was the celebrated Duff Green, of New York, a great turfman; Moccasin Jackson, of New York, the owner of Bucktail, the first great trotter ever taken to England; Harry Severn, said to be the handsomest man in New York, and owner of Oneida Chief, the fastest pacing horse in the world of that day, or since—I myself riding him a mile on Long Island track in two minutes and eight seconds; of course I was light weight. He was a beautiful chestnut sorrel; sixteen and one-half hands high, blaze face, four white legs. This was a trial race against time; his owner could get no matches in this country, and sent him to England with "Bucktail," where he was sold to Lord Elkton for a large sum. Then came Billy Semon, of Staten Island, owner of Dustyfoot, a running horse whom I afterward rode through the Western country, which gave me the nickname "Dan Dustyfoot," by which I was known in sporting circles. Next was Col. Elliott, the owner of the running mare, "Betsy Ransom," a gentleman who at that day became somewhat notorious because of a wager of $5,000 made that he would marry the celebrated premiere danseuse, Mme. Celeste, within twenty-four hours after being introduced to her. She made her first appearance in America at the Bowery Theater, creating an extraordinary furore as the Queen of Terpsichore. On her third appearance Elliott was introduced and won his bet. She had a child by him, a daughter, subsequently. I traveled a short distance with them West. I remember well several times of having the little darling on my lap while the mother was on the stage. Elliott and she lived unhappily together because of his dissipated habits. I saw that noble mother for the last time at Wheeling, W. Va. I learned that the daughter, after being thoroughly schooled and cultured, married a most estimable gentleman in Baltimore, Md. Mr. Stevens rose from the table when I handed him a letter, and said, "Gentlemen, excuse me for a short time. I have a matter of much importance to attend to," and in a pleasant manner remarked, "My boy, here, will play my hand in my absence," he knowing well that all race-horse boys could play cards. I was about to take his chair, when he said, "Allow me to introduce you to my leading rider," each gentleman shaking hands, including an odd-looking and to me an eccentric looking individual whom they called "Count Louis," who was a guest of Mr. Stevens. The play went on. I won three straight games; it came my deal. Count Louis drew from Mr. Stevens' pile of checks, and "staked" a big blind. I "put up" the cards while all were laughing at a distinguished Frenchman's bad English. I raked in the pile just as Mr. Stevens returned handing me a large-sized letter, when I said: "Boss, I have increased your pile, which I could have made still larger if 'Dosoras' had not got lame. This gentleman," pointing to Count Louis, "drew $20 worth of checks."

"Oui, oui, garcon, by'm by, I pay you more as dat."

This was the refugee, afterward Napoleon III., Emperor of France. He died in my debt; peace to his remains. Like him, I, too, have found my Sedan!

WARNER'S

KIDNEY & LIVER CURE

Disease is an effect, not a cause. Its origin is within; its manifestations without. Hence, to cure the disease the cause must be removed, and in no other way can a cure ever be effected. WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY AND LIVER CURE is established on just this principal. It realizes that

95 Per Cent.

of all diseases arise from deranged kidneys and liver, and it strikes at once at the root of the difficulty. The elements of which it is composed act directly upon these great organs, both as a food and a restorer, and by placing them in a healthy condition, drive disease and pain from the system.

For the innumerable troubles caused by unhealthy Kidneys, Liver and Urinary Organs; for the distressing Disorders of Women; for Malaria, and for physical derangements generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

MAGNETIC

OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

ALL SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, PILES, INFLAMMATION of LUNGS and BOWELS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, ALL PAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, EYES, GLANDS, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all disorders attendant with INFLAMMATION.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood; by this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Mental labor is not hostile to health and life. But I am more than ever convinced that a man who lives by his brain is of all men bound to avoid stimulating his brain. In this climate, to stimulate the brain by alcohol and tobacco is only a slow kind of suicide. Even the most moderate use of the mildest wine is not without danger, because the peculiar exhaustion caused by severe mental labor is a constant and urgent temptation to increase the quantity and strength of the potation. I would say to every young man in the United States, if could reach him: "If you mean to attain one of the prizes of your profession, and live a cheerful life to the age of eighty, throw away your dirty old pipe, put your cigars in the stove, never buy another, become an absolute teetotaler, take your dinner in the middle of the day, and rest one day in seven.—James Parton.

A man gets into trouble by marrying two wives. If he marries only one he may have trouble; and some men have come to sure tribulation by simply promising to marry one. Trouble anyhow.

The live question of hugging, whatever it may be, is before the Michigan Legislature in the shape of a bill to make hugging a girl against her will a penitentiary offence. No measure of this sort is likely to pass. No girl—unless the girls of Michigan are totally different from all other girls—wants any such law as that: it would spoil about ninety-nine one-hundredths of all the fun there is in this world, and every enterprising young man in the State would be in jail within a month.—[Philadelphia Times.

TO REMOVE GLASS STOPPERS.—Hold the neck of the bottle about half an inch above the flame of a lamp or candle for a few seconds. We have never failed even in the most obstinate cases. The hands should be wrapped in a towel, and great care should be taken not to let the flame touch the glass, as this might cause it to crack. The bottle should be kept rapidly turning during the operation, so as to bring all parts of the neck equally under the influence of the heat, when it will be rapidly expanded and the stopper may be withdrawn by a steady pull and twist. Sometimes it is necessary to tap the stopper lightly with a piece of wood. To twist the stopper, make an oblong hole in a piece of wood, into which the stopper will just fit.

To distinguish wrought and cast iron from steel, produce a bright surface by polishing or filing, and apply a drop of nitric acid, which should be allowed to remain for one or two minutes. Then wash off with water, and the spot will look a pale gray on wrought iron, brownish black on steel, and deep black on cast iron. It is carbon present in various proportions that produces the different appearance.

A SPRING DEFENSE.

How to Repel the Assaults of Ill Health.—Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY Means Something for You.

The months of March, April and May are the three successive arches of a bridge which connects the season of ice and sleet with that of leaves and roses. No less in respect of health than of onward natural phenomena is this true. Spring is a trying season for invalids, and particularly for those who either suffer, or are liable in another form, to Biliousness, Kidney complaint and Constipation of the Bowels, and for women who are chronically subject to any of the long catalogue of physical aberrations of disease in spring should be heeded at once. A fatal attack may easily result from neglect or a disordered condition of the bowels. The causes of prevention may be had where long neglect or attempted cure may be bewildering. Are you vexed or troubled in spring with indigestion, languor or disordered liver, want of appetite, constipation, or a feverish state of the skin? If so, take without an hour's unnecessary delay Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. No medicine is so harmless and yet so quick and positive in its action. It is Nature's own idea, concentrated and made tangible by human skill. Do not leave home when going upon a journey without a bottle of it in your valise. You cannot possibly put one safer in any other shape where it may render you so essential service. The Favorite Remedy is almost instantaneous in its action, but does not tear you to pieces with its violence nor nauseate you with disgust. It frees the liver from bile and sets the machinery of your body into normal and healthy operation. Remember Dr. D. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. Ask your druggist for it, and take nothing else. Price One Dollar a bottle.

CONGRESSIONAL.

SENATE.

MAY 1.—In the senate, Mr. Edmunds, from the judiciary committee, reported that no additional legislation is necessary to suppress lawlessness in the territories; that the president can warn the thieving gang in Arizona to disperse, and then use the army to restore order. Mr. Pendleton called attention to the necessity of conferring criminal jurisdiction upon our ministers and consuls, to prevent outrages on American citizens in the far east. An appropriation of $850,000 was recommended to purchase the Benjamin Franklin collection in London. Mr. Allison introduced a bill to provide for the construction of the Illinois and Mississippi river canal. On the bill to repeal the disprimination against ex-confederates in the army, a motion to refer the measure to the judiciary committee was carried. David Davis made an elaborate argument in favor of establishing a court of appeals. An executive session was held.

MAY 2.—The senate passed a bill to give twelve condemned cannon to the Morton Monumental association of Indiana. The motion to refer to the judiciary committee the bill removing the disqualification of ex-confederates for army appointments was defeated by the vote of David Davis. The house bill for a public building at Quincy, Ill., was passed, and the house amendment to the act for a postoffice at Peoria was concurred in, making the appropriation $250,000. Mr. Lapham proposed a constitutional amendment prohibiting any denial of suffrage on account of sex. Several amendments were offered to Mr. Davis' bill to establish a court of appeals. A favorable report was made on a bill to cede to the First taxing district of Tennessee, for a public library, a lot intended for a government building in Memphis.

MAY 3.—In the senate, Mr. Voorhees offered a resolution for a committee to investigate whether corrupt influences had been used on any member in regard to the bill relating to distilled spirits in bond, and asked therefor immediate consideration. Mr. Morrill objected, and the resolution went over. On the political disabilities bill, a partisan debate took place, in which Messrs. Ingalls, Saulsbury, Garland, Butler, Hampton, Voorhees, and Hawley participated. On the bill to create a court of appeals, the amendment as to patent and copyright cases was rejected, as were several others. The house amendment to the bill for the sale of Miami lands in Kansas was concurred in.

MAY 4.—In the senate, Mr. Voorhees called up his resolution for an investigation of alleged corrupt influences in regard to the bill to extend the bonded period for whisky. Mr. Windom, in moving an amendment for an inquiry as to whether money had been raised to assist the passage of that bill, remarked that he believed a gigantic whisky ring had been formed to control legislation. Mr. Voorhees' resolution was indefinitely postponed, but Mr. Windom will soon move for a committee of inquiry as to a distillers' corruption fund. A bill was passed for a light-house at Point Patterson, Lake Michigan. Mr. Sherman introduced a bill for the preservation of forests on public lands adjacent to navigable rivers. Bills were passed to restore to the public domain portions of the Fort Niobrara reservation in Kansas, and to give Memphis the site for a public library. An adjournment to Monday was taken.

HOUSE.

MAY 1.—In the house, bills were introduced for the appointment of a special commission to promote commercial intercourse with South America; for a board of three army engineers to determine the best route for ship canals between the lakes and the Mississippi, and from the Atlantic to the Gulf of Mexico, across Florida; and to transfer the Indian bureau to the war department. It was agreed that on May 9 the bill to extend the charters of national banks shall be considered. Mr. Townshend introduced a resolution that the president be requested to secure from China the abrogation of all treaties which permit the emigration of Chinese except for travel, education, or commerce, but the house refused to suspend the rules. A bill was passed for two judicial districts in Iowa. The house refused to take up a bill to tax American wines ten cents per bottle. Mr. Belmont offered a resolution calling on the president for copies of instructions from the navy department to the commander of the south Pacific squadron. The committee on military affairs reported a substitute for the bill relating to retirements from the army, providing that after serving thirty-five years any officer may be placed on the retired list by application to the president, or after reaching the age of 62 years. The speaker signed the Chinese bill.

MAY 4.—The house spent the day on the tariff-commission bill, in committee of the whole. Those who made speeches to print and send home were Messrs. Chandler, Gottschalk, Hatch, Lane, and Morrison. Mr. Kasson stated that he hoped for a vote on Saturday.

MAY 5.—The tariff-commission bill again occupied the time of the house of representatives for the day. Speeches were made by Messrs. Randall, Curtin, Whitthorne, Tucker, and Kelley. The former offered an amendment that the commission be composed of two senators, three representatives, and four civilian experts. An evening session was held to consider pension bills, at which forty-five were passed.

MAY 6.—The house went into committee of the whole on the tariff-commission bill. Mr. Randall's amendment for a mixed board was lost. An amendment by Mr. Hammond to place nine representatives on the commission was rejected. The recommendation of the ways and means committee that the clause for an inquiry into the internal revenue system be stricken out was agreed to. The committee then rose. An attempt by Mr. Kasson closed the debate, when the bill passed by 151 to 83. A resolution was adopted giving Mr. Maison leave to withdraw his papers in the Alabama contested election case. WASHINGTON NOTES.

Capt. Reds, who has been in bad health for some time, has gone to Fortress Monroe to rest.

It is generally believed now that a bill extending the bonded period on whisky cannot pass the Senate as it stands, though it may with material modifications.

The name of Gen. Meigs, of Washington, is mentioned as a possible selection for the district commissioner, made vacant by the death of Maj. Twining.

Cornelius A. Logan, late minister to the Central American States, recently transferred to Chili by Pres. Arthur, is a guest of Senator Logan's family.

The continuing portion of Fitz-John Porter's sentence, disabling him from holding any office of trust, honor, or profit under the government, has been remitted by the president.

Navy officials doubt if the bodies of Lieut. Chipp's party will ever be found. They think that Melville's party will cover the entire ground necessary to prove the fruitlessness of further search. There is time enough for all of the Jeannette survivors and Lieuts. Harber and Scheulze, who were sent in the search, to return by midsummer.

The resignation of Chief Clerk Power, although it will result in his having another good place, is known to be one step in the direction which Secretary Folger has determined to advance in the direction of purging the treasury of all whose names have been connected in any way whatever with its mismanagement.

Ex-Delegate Cannon asks Congress to authorize the payment of his full salary, mileage, and stationery allowance for the whole term of Congress.

A sub-committee of the house of representatives, after investigating the question of lapsed land grants, decides that the charters of the Northern Pacific and the Atlantic and Pacific are non-forfeitable.

The committee on claims reported to the senate a bill providing for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to the 31st of July, 1801.

The United States Fish Commissioner will be able to distribute 50,000,000 shad fry this month. These fish have been hatched and are to be put in the extensive incubating vats down the Potomac, in charge of Colonel MacDonald, assistant in charge of the works. This labor will be the heaviest undertaken thus far in the whole history of the commission.

Mr. W. W. Danenhower, the father of Lieut. Danenhower, tells a Washington Star reporter that he does not expect his son home before the end of the month. Owing to his inability to use his eyes he had not heard from him directly for some time. He expected that he would go to Berlin on leaving St. Petersburg, and thence to Paris, and from there to England.

The senate committee on military affairs has submitted a report on the conduct of the Soldiers' home near Washington. The grounds have become a national park for the benefit of wealthy citizens, and the expense of keeping up the beautiful drives is borne by the soldiers. General Drum has steadily refused to receive products of the gardens, but the other commissioners have for the past twelve years been regularly furnished with milk, fruit, bouquets, and all sorts of vegetables.

Saturday night's reception, in the capitol rotunda, in aid of the Garfield memorial hospital, must have been as great a pecuniary success as it was a great social success. The rotunda was gayly decorated, and tables were arranged in circles, one table representing two or three states. In the center was a great flower booth. Nearly all members of congress, many army and navy officers, and others in public life were there. Frances Hodgson Burnett coined money selling peanuts. Some of the ladies' costumes were very rich. In the old house of representatives hall the Marine band was stationed, and the marble floor was cleared for dancing, which was kept up until midnight.

The bill reported by the house committee on census provides for the appropriation of $75,000 to pay $500 apiece to supervisors of the census in addition to the compensation provided for and paid to them. The committee was divided as to this bill, but the majority found that it would be unfair to deprive of their deserts some of the men by reason of unavoidable and unprovided-for expenses and extra labor, because of the inability to draw the line between those who were entitled to extra compensation and others who have been fully paid.

Comptroller Knox has not yet received official notice of the acceptance by the government of the Freedman's bank property. It is, however, stated unofficially that the bill has been examined and found satisfactory. It is probable that the deed for the transfer of the property will be signed in a few days. If so, the comptroller will declare a dividend of 15 per cent. to the creditors payable some time in the month of June. The number of creditors to be paid is about 30,000, and it will require some weeks to prepare the schedules and the checks for payment each week. Another final dividend will be made hereafter of about 5 per cent.

The committee appointed by the American Bar Association to consider the subject of reorganization of the United States Supreme Court, has finished work, and will, it is understood, make public shortly three separate reports. Four members of the committee—E. J. Phelps, Courtlandt Parker, William M. Evarts, and Richard T. Merrick—agreed upon a report which recommends a division of the court into two chambers or sections, each to be composed of such justices and to have jurisdiction of such cases as the court in its discretion may agree upon. Certain classes of cases, however, such as those involving federal questions, shall be heard by not less than seven justices sitting together. No increase in the number of justices is thought necessary.

Commissioner of Pensions Dudley has ordered the following: By direction of the secretary of the interior, no substitution of an attorney by another will be recognized hereafter without the written consent of the applicant to the substitution of the particular person proposed to be substituted, and in cases where there is a legal contract for a fee the substitution of an attorney by another shall not be held to carry with it the rights of the former attorney to the fee contracted for by him, unless the claimant shall consent thereto in writing. This order will not apply in cases where the substitution of an attorney has been allowed prior to this date.

The communication from the secretary of the navy, in response to the house resolution calling for information relative to the condition of the navy, contains a tabulated statement showing the time and cost required to make each vessel of the navy engage in battle with an enemy of the same general classification. Omitting hulks unfit for repairing, there are sixty-three vessels in the list, thirty-three reported "efficient for immediate use." To put in condition the remaining thirty, it is estimated, would cost $3,173,000, and the time necessary is variously estimated at from two to eighteen months each, eighteen months being the estimated time required on five vessels. The communication also embodies a detailed statement of the cost of repairs on vessels since 1865, the total being $23,075,000. The total cost of vessels in the navy was $72,915,776.

The big whisky-men from every one of the large cities have been here to use their influence with the senators of their respective states in favor of the bill to extend indefinitely the time in which whisky can remain in bond. They have made so much impression that they claim a majority of the senate in favor of passing the bill as it came from the house. As has been shown very conclusively, the effect of the measure would be to reduce the revenues of the government so much as to produce a serious embarrassment. The senate finance committee is willing to afford the whisky interest any reasonable measure of relief, and will report an amendment extending the time in which whisky can remain in bond one year, and perhaps longer. If the amendment is voted down and the bill passes as it came from the house, it is quite sure to be vetoed by the president.

OBITUARY.

CORYELL.—Andrew Coryell departed this life at his residence in the village of Ridgeway, on Saturday, April 29, aged nearly 82 years.

The deceased was born in New Jersey in 1800, and moved to the state of Michigan in 1826. He was united in marriage to Miss Esther Carpenter in the town of Broughton, N. Y., Oct. 18, 1823, and was the father of seven sons and three daughters. He was from an early day religiously inclined, and at the age of twenty connected himself with the Presbyterian church, and served this denomination as a deacon and layman for about thirty years. Upon locating in Ridgeway he changed his church relationship and became a charter member of the Christian church at that place, and has been regarded as a worthy member of the denomination for a period of 31 years. Very much can be written in eulogy of Andrew Coryell, for during a long industrious and prudent life, his neighbors can but say, he has been exemplary and that he was kind and obliging, an affectionate parent and a hospitable friend. He possessed a generous heart and in many respects was a true man. His departure is an irreparable loss and is felt by his respected widow, the affectionate children, society and the church. We shall miss him at his house, in the prayer meeting, around the Lord's table and in the public congregation. We shall miss his counsel, his prayers and his company. God gives us men, but when their mission is ended they must bow to the inexorable decree and descend to the dust. His funeral services were attended by a large assemblage on May 1, at the M. E. church, of Ridgeway, and valuable assistance was rendered by Revs. Kilpatrick and Sharp, who manifested a deep christian sympathy for the afflicted, and a high regard for the deceased. The departed in his decline gave a satisfactory evidence that to depart was his gain, for he went into death with a willingness rarely seen, saying to his pastor only a little before he expired, "all looks bright." His remains were committed to the dust in the cemetery at Ridgeway, followed thither by a large circle of weeping mourners and friends. Peace be to his ashes.

C.C. SINK.

TRAVERSE.—Died at her residence in North Macon on the morning of Sunday, April 16, Harriet Matilda, widow of the late C. M. Traverse.

The graces of patience and resignation to the will of her Heavenly Father were strikingly exhibited by this estimable lady throughout the whole of the lingering and painful illness which closed her career on earth. For many years she had been a member of the Reformed church at North Macon. She died as she had lived, a christian, trusting in Jesus. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." COM.

FRANKLIN.

Mrs. Forest Cooley and daughter of Manchester, are visiting at O. Kemps this week.

Wm. Beebe has moved on and taken possession of the farm purchased of R. P. Butrick. He and his father are farming independently now.

We regret to learn of the severe illness of Uncle Frank Stout. At last accounts his friends had hopes of his recovery.

Miss Cook, who has been teaching in Franklin for some time, is in declining health and has been taken to her brother's, in Milan. It is thought she cannot recover.

A short time since fire was set to Lou Peters' barn, at the Center, but was discovered by early risers and put out; an attempt was made to fire W. P. Deming's blacksmith shop at the same time. They have strong suspicions of the incendiary.

Bert Tuttle started his meat wagon last Monday with flattering success.—He has been at considerable expense in fitting up his market at the Center with refrigerator and all the modern apparatus for keeping meat. His efforts will be greatly appreciated by the citizens.

The pupils of Dist. No. 5, Josie M. Butrick teacher, spent last Saturday afternoon with Longfellow. The pupils were able to entertain their parents and visiting friends in a pleasant and profitable manner, which reflects much credit on themselves and teacher.

Fannie M. Webster, teacher of Dist. No. 6, was presented by her pupils with a call bell a few days since. Miss W. is a systematic teacher and merits the love and esteem of her pupils.—The district expect to have a new frame school house by the last of October. It is to be regreted that they do not see fit to have a basement, a commodity which at the time of building would not cost $20 extra.

ROME.

It is about time something was said in regard to this place and surroundings.

The second E'ocutionery class closed sometime ago with an entertainment which was a success in every way, it being the last one of three highly pleasing entertainments given here by the class during the past four months. Much of their success is due to the untiring zeal and excellent instruction of their teacher, Mrs. Rebecca McCann of Ohio.

Our school commenced with an attendance of about forty, Miss Jenkins of Addison, teacher.

For the past two weeks no liquors of any kind have been sold here, owing to the bonds being $4000. The people begin to think the town will continue if none is sold at all. It probably will.

The agent for the Detroit Mutual Benefit association is doing considerable business in town at present.

Weather cold and rainy, and as a consequence no gardens, or no corn in. Roads very bad and house cleaning delayed.

Old Mrs. Dodge is slowly improving.

Mr. Dwight Billings is erecting a barn where his old one stood.

Richard Ross is attending school in Adrian. Owing to ill health he is unable to attend as regular as he would like to.

SPRINGVILLE.

The 87 hour rain last week made it convenient to participate in indoor amusements in which the village was lively.

The I. O. G. T. are prospering finely; five were initiated at their last meeting, and it became necessary for one man to appoint himself a committee to throw the sixth down stairs, but after a few moments Charles concluded to let him deliver his message and pass down uninjured.

Uncle Henry Smith has been very ill. On Tuesday last Dr. Palmer of Brooklyn was called, and he is reported on the gain at present.

J. H. Smith has employed John Ladd for the season, and at present they are building a barn.

It makes the band boys smile to have John get hold of the tuba again.

RIGA has the largest number of children between five and twenty years old of any town in the county and hence gets the largest slice of the primary school fund.

RIDGEWAY.

The local telegraph line to the station is a great convenience and is being much appreciated.

During the past week Mrs. Peter Sharp has been quite seriously ill, but is now improved.

The church social this week Friday evening will be held at the residence of Mrs. Arner in the village.

Miss Nellie Clark and Mrs. John Britton are added to the sick list this week.

A. Sutton is in the Holloway station office supplying the regular agent's place a month or so.

Rev. J. Kilpatrick is holding Sunday afternoon meetings in neighboring school houses. One week from Sunday afternoon a Sunday school will be organized at Jesse Exelby's district on the prairie.

Rev. J. L. Hudson of Morenci, who was with us a short time since and gave an excellent temperance address, will exchange pulpits with our minister on Sunday, May 28th. On Sunday evening Mr. Hudson will speak in the interest of the alliance and the cause of temperance. A large attendance is expected as all were well pleased with the first lecture.

COMMON COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

VILLAGE OF TECUMSEH, MICH., Council Room, May 15, 1882.

The minutes of the preceding meeting read and approved.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

On streets:

The committee reported that they had directed some temporary repairs upon the Brownville bridge deemed necessary for the immediate safety thereof at an additional expense of fifteen dollars. Also that they had bought fifteen new street lamps at an expense of $138.43 including the needed extras.

The report was accepted and adopted and the President and Recorder directed to draw an order for the amount of the bill for said lamps and the freight and drayage thereon immediately upon the receipt and acceptance of the goods.

On Cemetery:

The committee reported, recommending that the request of Wm. Mather to cut down a certain tree in his cemetery lot be granted.

Report accepted and adopted and request granted.

On Finance:

The committee asked that their report be deferred; granted.

REPORTS OF OFFICERS.

The Marshall reported as follows:

That he had bad printed two hundred and fifty notices for delinquents in the matter of sidewalks, and had served one hundred and thirty-five. That the sidewalks at the school house grounds on Kilbuck st., and on east side of Military Square should be rebuilt, and that many crosswalks needed repairs. Also that gambling was being carried on by Orange Gilman in Hewitt's block in rooms occupied by him as living rooms.

The report was accepted and adopted and the Marshall directed to notify the owner of the building occupied by Gilman of the facts and requiring the rooms to be closed at once.

The Marshall requested that additional deputies be appointed to act upon the 27th day of May, at the regular rate of $2.00 per day, and on motion the Marshall was directed to deputize two men to act as such deputies upon said day.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS.

The committee appointed to investigate the matter of building a new barn asked for further time. Granted.

The committee appointed to estimate upon the revision of the ordinances, reported material difficulties in making such estimate without more definite instructions and asking further time and instructions. On motion Mr. Steinhoff was added to the committee by the President and they were instructed to examine the records of the village with a view of striking out such ordinances as had become obsolete and to make estimates upon the expense of a revision of such ordinances and resolutions as are now properly in force, to report at next meeting.

The recorder reported that the fund set apart by the Common Council to Samuel James in March of 1863, for the improvement of the public square on the corner of Kilbuck and Ottawa streets had been expended in making improvements therein.

Accepted and adopted.

On Finance:

Recommending the payment of the following bills:

H. W. Stevens	$13 50
Jno. Smyth	2 00
Alva Waring	80

Report was adopted and orders directed drawn.

On motion Council then adjourned.

FREDERICK B. WOOD, Recorder.

THE first number of volume five of the Deerfield Record was issued last week. The Record is well established and is a credit to its publisher and to the village whose name it bears. Bro. Hawkins enters upon his fifth volume with renewed energy and ambition.

True Merit Always Wins.

There is a constantly increasing demand for Brown's Iron Bitters. A druggist on Washington street reports the sale of 23 bottles the first month, 86 bottles the second month, and 148 bottles the third month; and not one complaint or failure to give entire satisfaction as being the very best health and life giving medicine in the world.

Morenci Observer: Hiram Flagler, an aged bachelor living in the north part of Seneca, died very suddenly last Sunday morning. He had long been a resident of the vicinity, and since the death of his brother, Alexander, had lived alone in the house which both had previously occupied. He had not been feeling well for a few days and on Sunday morning one of his neighbors went to see him and found him dead, he having to all appearance just expired. Those who had known Hiram longest were supposed to have been acquainted with him best.

Given up by Doctors.

"Is it possible that Mr. Godfrey is up and at work, and cured by so simple a remedy?"

"I assure you it is true that he is entirely cured, and with nothing but Hop Bitters; and only ten days ago his doctors gave him up and said he must die!"

"Well-a-day! That's remarkable! I will go this day and get some for my poor George—I know hops are good."

MAYBURY, PULLMAN & HAMILTON'S show will exhibit at Tecumseh, on Saturday, May 27, a pair of twin baby elephants, pronounced to be the only pair of twin baby elephants ever seen together. They are well tamed and will take a foremost rank in their holiday street parade.

Kellogg's Columbian Oil is a thorough remedy on Kidney Complaints and Rheumatism, and on acute aches and pains its cures are almost instantaneous.

W. H. GORMAN, the most daring hurdle rider that now rides, will appear in his masterly acts of horsemanship in Tecumseh on Saturday, May 27, with Maybury, Pullman & Hamilton's show.

No, Sir!

A Scotch minister once said no woman could bear pain as well as a man. This is not so. The fact is generally the other way. Mrs. Edward Myers, of Rondout, N. Y., submitted to the operation of the removal of her hand by amputation, without ether, or moving a muscle, or uttering a groan. Dr. Kennedy, also of Rondout, N. Y., who performed the operation, said he never saw such heroism. The lady's disease was Erysipelas, and afterward the Doctor gave his "Favorite Remedy" to cleanse the blood. Mrs. Meyers is now well and strong.

THE SILVER BULLET.

In 1869 Lawrence Nutting was a United States Marshal in the Southern district of Virginia. The state was at that time fairly overrun with outlaws of all classes. Bushwhackers, highwaymen, counterfeiters and "moonshiners" nestled in all the country-side among the mountains, and far from towns and cities upon lonely roads; while gamblers and desperadoes swarmed in and about the settlements. Crime was frequent, and the life of a United States officer was a series of stirring adventures involving great danger, and demanding as great tact and personal bravery.

But Nutting proved himself worthy and fit for the office. A young man of temperate habits, quick wit, splendid physique and dashing courage, he was never at a loss how to act; and the vermin that infested that section soon learned to hate and fear him intensely.

Many were the expeditions which the officer had led, many his escapes, and many the criminals safely captured and walled by his efforts; but one man evaded him. The shrewdest and worst "moonshiner" of all was still at large, despite all his efforts, Nutting had not yet secured Ruloff Allen.

This man was known throughout the state. His career had been that of criminal from his birth. In the fastnesses of southwestern Virginia, he manufactured whisky upon a grand scale, and was the owner of a dozen or more "queer stills," and flapped his fingers at the law.

Several times had Nutting sought the quarry; twice he had actually caught him, yet twice he had escaped, and at the time of which we speak he was still free.

Nutting sat at his office window one evening, musing, half dreaming, when there fell a light touch on his shoulder. He started up quickly. A stranger stood before him.

"The United States Marshal?" said he, interrogatively.

"Yes sir," said Lawrence, rising. "Be seated. What can I do for you?"

"I would speak with you alone," he said, glancing around. "I have matters of importance to communicate."

"This office is out of hearing from the street," replied Nutting, "and we are by ourselves. You can speak freely."

The other drew a couple of cigars from his pocket, offered one to the marshal, and lit the other himself. Nutting followed his example; then the man drew his chair nearer, so that he sat between the officer and the desk whereon lay his belt and pistols, threw open his coat so that the butts of two heavy revolvers might be seen, and blowing the smoke lightly from his cigar, said in a quiet tone to his companion:

"You are desirous of arresting a noted moonshiner, one Ruloff Allen, are you not?"

"There's no doubt of that," said the marshal smiling.

"I am the man."

Nutting's cigar never stirred in his lips; no hand did not quiver, nor his breath come the quicker. A single sign showed how deeply he was moved; his eyes dilated, then he laughed long and low.

"You—you, Ruloff Allen?" My friend, I know Allen. His hair is red; yours is black. His face bears a scar across the chin; you, a beard. His teeth are broken; yours are perfect. The joke is good, but you are not Allen."

The other hesitated a moment, then striking a wig from his head, a beard from his chin, and removing a single false tooth, he turned again to Nutting, red-haired and smiling.

And now?

"You are Allen!"

For a full moment neither man moved. It was as though two large tigers gazed at each other. Then the outlaw said:

"Listen! I am afraid! you are not. I am fully as desperate a man as report makes me. I am as strong as you. Do not try to arrest me, for I shall then be obliged to kill you. I came here to have a private talk, but it was necessary that you should know who I am. I will not molest you if you will do the same by me, and give me fifteen minutes to escape when we have finished.

Nutting measured his chances. Unarmed in the presence of a man to whom murder was not new, he deemed prudence the better part, and replied:

"I agree."

"Good," said Allen, removing his own pistols. "Your word is equal to mine. We shall both be unarmed. And now I would tell you a story."

Then moving his chair still nearer the marshal, and as the twilight fell and night came down he told of his life—a weird, strange history, every line intense with the throbbing passion of a lawlessness which made up much of what he was.

The officer listened breathlessly; the hours passed and both and the cigars were smoked long before the story was ended.

At length, however, the visitor paused, and then concluded as follows:

"So have I lived. As a wild man, almost; and that life has for the past five years been more a mania than ever before, but with a method. I am and have been making money and among only. Now I quietly different, you will say, from all the world, except that my search was without the pale of the law. And now the end has come. I am rich. I have enough, and now I desire to return to civilization. You can permit it—you can prevent it. I am an outlaw. Very well—I will cease outlawry, will turn my stills to the government, will swear a great oath, and keep it, too—for my own interests demand it—to become a worthy citizen; and if you will accept the prodigal son, and kill for me the fatted calf of pardon, all will be well. I came here to ask you to intercede for me. Will you do so?"

Nutting hesitated a moment.

This man was a veritable Robin Hood. Could he trust him?

The other spoke again.

"Such assistance from an official is what I need, and I can pay for it. If you will—a free pardon for me, I will give you—a thousand—"

"Stop!" The young man's eyes blazed. "You have gone too far! I might have deemed it my duty to do as you asked, in order to wipe out your cursed traffic; but you have now sought to place me on a par with yourself. You offer to bribe me and render me as rank in the nostrils of honest men as yourself. I refuse!"

Allen's face paled, and his hand crept toward his hip; then restraining himself with a scoffing laugh, he said:

"Be it so. Then we are enemies. I to you and the law; you to me. Remember my fifteen minutes, and beware when next we meet?"

He threw his cloak about him, buckled his pistols at his waist, and disappeared, but as he left the room a little piece of metal fell from his person, and rolled unnoticed upon the floor. A minute later the ring of his horse's hoofs sounded through the night as he rode toward the mountains.

The morning following, as Nutting entered his office, his aged servant bowed low before him, extending his brown and wrinkled hand, and said in an awe-stricken voice:

"Foun' dis on de floor, massa. S'pose him your'n, bad thing, massa, bad—ef ye low ole nigger to say so!"

The marshal leaned forward in surprise. Lying in the out-stretched palm of the black was a silver pistol bullet.

"Why, uncle," said he, taking it, "this is not mine!"

"Not your'n, massa! Think de lord! I'se pleased, I is, massa. Foun' it yer, dough. Dat ar's a seweyside bullet, massa," he continued, lowering his voice to a whisper, while his eyes rolled like ships in the midst of white and seething billows; "I know 'em! My ole massa he had one cast, an' carried it many years. Dey neber kill no one but de fellers dey's made for. Massa John, dough, he didn't git a chance for, to use his'n," and the old man chuckled.

"A suicide bullet," said Nutting, with a smile, as he examined the silver sphere. "That's a new idea to me. Why make a special bullet, uncle? I should think one of those deadly enough."

And he pointed toward some of the heavy cartridges belonging to his own pistols which lay on the table near.

"Dey mought miss, massa. Ye know de debbil cares for his own, an' dis bullet is made by his help, at night, in de graveyard, an can't miss. I knows 'em massa. I's seen 'em afore." Then, drawing nearer, he whispered, "I's made 'em!"

"And did they do their work?" said Nutting, laughing lightly.

"Dey did, massa."

The officer now opened a drawer in his desk, and took from it an old-fashioned dueling-pistol, which he had picked up somewhere, and fitted the bullet into its rusty muzzle.

"It's just the thing, uncle. Bring me my flask, and I'll load it with the suicide bullet. It's best to have it handy lest I get the blues." He laughed again.

The servant obeyed.

"No use to fix 'im massa. 'Twon't only kill de one who it's made for, shuah an' ye couldn't shoot yerself wid it, nohow."

"Well, uncle, I'll load the old smoothbore, anyway," said the marshal, suiting the action to the word, "and this afternoon we'll try it at a mark. If I miss a half-dollar at a dozen paces, I'll give up that you're right. If I hit, your 'suicide bullet' is no better or worse than a leaden one."

"All right, massa, but you won't hit," replied the old darkey.

Just as Nutting completed the charging of the weapon, a visitor called, and it was thrust hurriedly into a pigeon-hole in the desk. His visitor's business detained him from the office until night, and the plan of the morning was forgotten. The dueling-pistol with its silver missile lay unnoticed for months in the desk.

The days and weeks passed, summer came and went, and fall ripened the year. A dozen times had the marshal organized expeditions and scoured the country, seeking the notorious Allen, but each time he had returned unsuccessful. Occasionally a still would be destroyed, or a quantity of liquor seized, but the man himself remained free, and the winter was approaching rapidly. Soon these raids must be dropped for the year. Nutting chafed under his ill success.

One final effort, however, was to be made. Certain information which he knew to be reliable had at last, he felt sure, put the outlaw in his hands, and he looked to his horse's shoes and loaded his pistols with unusual care.

At his orders mounted guards—men on whom he could depend—patrolled all the roads. Upon the morrow at dawn, with a posse of seven fearless mountaineers, he was to storm the very stronghold of the moonshiners, and to-morrow night would find a vacancy either in the government office or the ranks of the illicit distillers. The expedition had thus far, Nutting believed, been kept a secret. Because of this he looked forward with strong hopes of success.

The officer sat at his desk writing. He had a few pages to complete, a letter or two to prepare for the mail, and some memoranda to destroy. He might never sit at that desk again.

As his eyes wandered over the mass of papers, documents and duplicate reports, filed neatly away before him, he suddenly noticed the butt end of his old dueling pistol, half hidden in one of the compartments, and as the remembrance of how it came there flashed over him, he was about to draw it from its hiding-place, when a shuffling step at the door arrested him, and an instant later an aged and bent woman entered the door.

The hour was late, and Nutting regarded the new comer with surprise, as he arose to offer her a chair. She accepted it with a whine of thanks, and sank panting into it. The marshal resumed his seat at the desk.

"Ye are the gov'ment man, I reckon," said the woman, after a pause, raising a brown and wrinkled face, half hidden beneath an immense hood and a pair of green spectacles, toward Nutting.

"Yes, madam," replied that worthy.

"I've come a right smart piece to see ye, for an old woman. I'm true grit, I am, but a-gittin' wore out. These yere mountains are a sight steeper'n they was forty year ago," and she sighed. "But see here, I'm on business, I am. I want to talk to ye. You don't know me, I reckon?"

"I can't say that I do," said Nutting, slowly.

"I reckon not—as ye never see me before. I'm Mrs. Allen—Bethsheby Allen—an' my boy is Ruloff Allen. Ye've heard of him, mebbe?" and she paused and gazed cunningly into her listener's face.

"Yes, I know him," and the man's brow darkened.

"Well, now, I'll tell ye. It 'pears yer on a raid arter him to-morrer—ye see I know a thing or two—an' ye've got the boy badly cooped up this time, shore. Not but what he'll fight, an' some on ye'll catch suthin' besides moonshiners. My boy's smart, he is, I tell ye, an' he'll tote ye round consider'ble afore ye gether him; but he's cooped all the same, an' I'm afeard ye'll catch him or kill him. An' I'm his mammy, ye know."

The old hag paused and wiped her eyes. She was a woman even yet, and Nutting's heart softened towards her.

"What can I do in this matter, Mrs. Allen?" began the marshal. "Your son is a——"

"Never mind what he is—you can save him. He's trapped, catched, cooped. But he's my boy, an' I want ye to let him go. Take his stills an' his whisky, take everything—but let him go, an' I'll give ye my word—it's good, Bethsheby Allen never broke it yit—that in less than three days we'll be——"

"Mrs. Allen, this is impossible. I'll try not to hurt your son, but capture him I must and shall."

"But if he should capture you—what then?"

At these words the green glasses fell, the hood was thrown back, the bent form became straight, and before the eyes of the dazed officer stood Ruloff Allen himself, a look of deadly hatred on his face, a heavy revolver in his outstretched hand.

Silence reigned a moment, as the young man gazed into the deadly tube before him with nerves tense as steel and a face that paled not, although he knew that he was looking into his open grave.

"I came here to give you one last chance, and myself the same," hissed the moonshiner. "That chance is lost to both of us. I go back to the mountains and outlawry—you retire from active service. Can you pray? If so, do it now. In three minutes I shall kill you."

Slowly Nutting's eye ran about the room. Escape was impossible—help would not come. A single word meant instant death—he was lost—his heart sank.

Suddenly the butt of the old dueling pistol came within the circle of his vision. Cool as his would-be murderer, he turned to him and said: "Will you let me smoke once more?"

The fellow eyed him sharply.

"Smoke? Yes, one cigar," he said, at length. And lowering the muzzle of his weapon, he thrust it into his pocket to supply his victim's wants.

"I have some here," said Nutting, and like a flash his hand shot upward toward the pigeon-hole where lay the old dueling pistol.

"Down with your hand!" cried Allen.

It was too late. There came a sharp and ringing report, a single cry, a dull and sickening thud upon the floor, and all was over.

And the moon, breaking from between the rifted clouds without, looked through the open window upon the face of the dead, while Nutting, white and trembling, held in his nerveless hand a smoking pistol.

The silver bullet had found its mark and returned to its owner. The United States Marshal was saved!

A Model Kitchen Table.

My cooking table is eight feet long—it should be nine—and is placed in a recess between the chimney and a window, the size of which decides its length. It is two feet seven inches high, and should be two feet three inches on top. Below it is enclosed at the back and ends, and has doors in front. It has no floor, but stands directly on the floor of the room, and is movable. The enclosed space below is divided into three compartments. The right-hand closet contains the flour barrel; a door coming down to the floor opens to admit it and closes tightly again until the next barrel is needed. Inside there is a space to hang baking-pans by their rings on the partitions; over the flour barrel there is a lid that is raised whenever flour is to be taken out; the sieve and scoop remains in a barrel. The lid is a part of the surface of the table, and opens over the whole width of the flour compartment. Above the door of the middle closet there is a drawer without back or sides, which is the bread-board. When drawn out and turned around the front becomes a back, and is very useful in preventing the scattering of flour in rolling pastry; when returned to its place the roller can remain upon the board. Below this drawer is a closet with a door, and a shelf large enough for a pan of milk, or bowls and pudding dishes; below the shelf is space for a bucket or sugar, a jar of lard or cream and a molasses jug. The left-hand closet has at top a drawer divided into two compartments, one for eggs, the other for spices, yeast powders, nutmeg-grater and cake-cutter; a shelf below holds boxes of saleratus, a bag of salt, boxes of rice or tapioca, jug of syrup, jar of preserves while in use, or is an excellent place to keep pies. I can assure any woman who has not the latter convenience, that is a great saving of time in cooking to have all these in reach of her hand without stepping from her place. The table, including its surface, being about an inch and a half higher than a flour barrel, a short woman cannot mould bread or roll pastry easily without something to stand on. A narrow piece of board, about two feet wide, with two pieces of board nailed across its under side, is one of the best conveniences of all; for on a cold morning, when I have biscuits to bake, I warm my wooden cricket by the fire, and it saves me any uncomfortable chilliness, and as the closet door swings over it is not in the way. There should be a narrow strip of wood nailed upon the back of the surface of the table and one across, between the principal part of the table and the floor division, to keep water from flowing over the back or into the division containing flour, when washing the table after cooking.—N. Y. Tribune.

How to Get Sick.—Expose yourself day and night, eat too much without exercise, work too hard without rest, doctor all the time, take all the vile nostrums advertised, and then you will want to know

How Sleigh-bells are Made.—How many boys and girls know how the jingling sleigh-bells are made? How do you think the little iron ball gets inside the bell? It is too big to be put in through the hole in the bell, and yet it is inside. How did it get there?

This little iron ball is called the 'jinglet.' When you shake the sleigh-bell it jingles. When the horse trots the bells jingle, jingle, jingle. In making the bell, this jinglet is put inside a little ball of mud, just the shape of the inside of the bell. Then a mold is make just the shape of the outside of the bell. This mud ball with the jinglet inside is placed inside the mold of the outside and the melted metal is poured in, which fills up the space between the mud and the mold.

When the mold is taken off, you see a sleigh bell, but it would not ring, as it is full of dirt. The hot metal dries the dirt that the ball is made of, and it can be all shaken out of holes in the bell, and it will ring all right.

How It is Brewed.

The following apostrophe to water may be justly regarded as one of the finest pieces of composition in the English language.

"Not in the summering still, over smoking fires, choked with poisonous gases, and surrounded with the stench of sickening odors and rank corruption, doth our Father in Heaven prepare the precious essence of life, pure cold water. But in the green glade and grassy dell, where the red deer wanders and the child loves to play, there God himself brews it; and down, low down in the deepest valleys, where the fountains murmur and the rills sing; and high upon the mountain-tops, where the naked granite glistens like gold in the sun—where the storm-cloud broods and the thunder-storm crashes; and away, far out on the wide, wide sea, where the hurricane howls its music, and the big waves roar the chorus, 'sweeping the march of God'—there He brews it, that beverage of life—health-giving water.

And everywhere it is a thing of beauty; gleaming in the dew-drop, singing in the summer rain, shining in the ice-gem till the trees seem turned to living jewels; spreading a golden veil over the setting sun, or a silvery gauze around the midnight moon; sporting in the cataract, sleeping in the glacier, dancing in the hailshower, folding bright snow-curtains softly above the wintry world, and weaving the many-colored iris, that seraph's zone of the sky whose warp is the rain of earth, whose woof is the sunbeam of heaven, all checkered o'er with celestial flowers by the mystic wand of rarefaction, still always it is beautiful, that blessed cold water.

No poison bubbles on its brink; its foam brings not madness and murder; no blood stains its liquid glass; pale widows and starving orphans weep not burning tears in its clear depths; no drunkard's shrieking ghost from the grave curses it in words of despair!

Speak out, my friends, would you exchange it for the demon's drink, alcohol?"

Woman's Triumph

(From the Correspondence of the Kingston, N. Y. "Freeman.")

The case of Mrs. Edward Myers, of Roundout, New York, furnishes an apt illustration of woman's power of endurance. This lady had been treated for months in the usual way for Erysipelas of the hand without benefit. Not until her hand had become a mass of putrified flesh did she turn to Dr. Kennedy, proprietor of the "Favorite Remedy," for help.

He at once informed her that it was impossible to save the hand—it must be amputated. She received the terrible intelligence quietly, declining to take ether, stipulating merely to hold her husband's hand during the operation, and underwent the painful process without moving a muscle or uttering a groan. Dr. Kennedy then gave "Favorite Remedy" freely to cleanse the blood and prevent the return of the disease, and Mrs. Myers now lives and rejoices in her great deliverance.

"Favorite Remedy" is fast becoming a trusted household friend in all cases of Female Weakness and diseases of the blood. One dollar a bottle. Your druggist has it.

POSITIVELY CURED BY

Benson's Capcine Porous Plasters.

Reasons Why they Are Preferred to All Other Porous Plasters or External Remedies:

First.

Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and active vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.

Second.

Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

Third.

Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain at once.

Fourth.

Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

Fifth.

Because over 5000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

Sixth.

Because the manufacturers have received the only medals ever given for porous plasters.

Tea Curing and Packing in Foochow.

The following quaintly worded yet very graphic description of the work done in a large Chinese tea packing house is given by the Foochow Herald, at the close of a season's operations:

A large packing house presents a very different scene from that of two months ago. Then, at the door one found lines of fifteen catty boxes and waiting to be soldered up. Now, none. Next, one found fat bags stacked up eight or ten feet, bursting with Pehling tea that had escaped here and there through holes temporarily stopped with bamboo leaves; the bottom of the bags mostly stained from contact with wet flights of mountain stairs upon which the exhausted coolies had set them down on the passage.

Now, one finds but empty chests, hundreds in number, square, deep and oblong, used for handling the tea in the factory. Ordinary tea chests would not stand the rough usage.

Father on, one comes to the dozen long double row of sifters facing each other, forty in a row, the mesh of one taking a pencil—that of others refusing a pencil point—sifting tea leaf rough and bold, that after persuasive grasp or two in the hand broke, and consented, after a few shakes in the sieve, to be stripped of the sappy leaf edge and to appear below, the even and uniform leaf which tea the drinker insists he must have (plus the dust due to persuading.) The transformation in a rough leaf on passing the meshes of a coarse sieve, with a gentle crush from the sifter's hands, enhances a rough bold tea much in value.

In place of the rows of men then seen tilting and jerking their selves in a monotony only broken by the Cantonese taskmaker's roll call twice a day before the general meal of fish and rice, there is now to be seen only the bare floor of hardened earth, piles of empty benches stacked in a corner, and the sieves of the twelve different sizes used, each in its division in the three story stands.

The dozen or score of fanning mills are still now. The trained hands are gone that turned the cranks with a uniform motion, sending the heavy tea, light tea, and flaky dust each down its respective spout separated, never again to meet, unless haphazard, mixed in a Whitechapel grocer's window.

The tea leaf separated in these fanning mills has been parted with at the smart loss of Tis, 8,000 on 2,500 piculs to the foreign buyer, and has been let go by the latter to the London dealer or auction room habitue. The mills now stand still. The tea growers in the hills who waited through June and July for their money have now been paid. The losses to the packers here, however, have been so smart that there is a little third crop tea now being packed in Foochow, and the mills will rest until another May shall bring the physical courage bred of hot blood back to the pale and dispirited native teamen. There are stacked up in this go-down a few hundred packages of native maker's brick tea wrapped in plaited bamboo strips, bound in half bamboo and triply rattanned. Aside here, the Chinese upper mill stone is being turned upon the nether by a Chinese who is grinding the seeds left by the fanning mill.

In these sycee boxes sharp spades are falling upon the tea stems, chopping them fine enough to go into the stemmy dust mixture to which the seed dust gives the strength, while the chopped stems vouch for it being tea.

In the firing house, four Chinese rice kettles, two feet across the mouth, set obliquely across the edge, turn the tea back in a shower over the hand of the stirrer, a wood fire being kept up in the brickwork underneath. Fire holes, scores in number, follow in rows the walls of the firing house; in each an iron pan is placed, ready-filled and rounded with charcoal ready to be lit. Placed over each of these fires is a huge hour-glass-shaped-basket-hood or muffler that shuts in all heat of each fire to but one outlet—that through the tea sieve that chokes the throat of each basket.

In these baskets is dried off the tea that comes from the hills wet or flat from constant down pours and from the first fermentation of the leaf. These fires are out and all is still.

Here too, on the floor above, the benches are empty where girls and women came—some too often—to throw out the stems from the leaf, getting half a cent for removing those from two catties of tea given them in wound bamboo woven trays.

The floor is now bare where we saw the Ningteh tea brought to a uniform shade, by shaking in bags with a few spoonfuls of lampblack; then balked upon the floor, only to be strewn white as a grave in spring with the pure munil blossoms; then blossoms in turn, buried under another avalanche of funeral tea, and this again with blossoms, life upon death! then Novel Use of Canceled Greenbacks.

"What becomes of all the greenbacks and bank-notes after they have served their few years of usefulness?" is a frequent query. A bank-note has its life just the same as all other things useful. What an interesting story the travels of a greenback, from the moment it leaves the press until it returns to the macerating machine, would make! The average life of a bank-note is about three years, perhaps a little longer. After serving its purpose as currency it is metamorphosed into rabbits, birds and other figures. The process of the destruction of the notes is an interesting one. The reader will often see in the daily papers a paragraph something like this: "National bank-notes received for redemption to-day, $500,000." The next day these notes are carried to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and placed in a machine containing immense knives, which chop the notes into small fragments. This operation is conducted under the supervision of three officers of the Treasury Department, specially detailed for this purpose. No one is allowed to be present at this daily maceration of the notes except the officers and the men who run the machine. They are compelled to remain in the room until each separate note is destroyed. They must account in detail afterwards to the Redemption Bureau for each note; and should one become lost or mislaid, and afterwards find its way into circulation, the result would be the immediate discharge of the three gentlemen who daily have in their custody from half a million to two or three millions of notes and bonds. The shreds are reduced to pulp, and then by a patented process this mass is molded into figures of birds and animals and sold as mementoes to visitors. Oftentimes it will happen that one little object will be composed of what once was $1,000 worth of money.

ARE ALL THE CHILDREN IN?

The darkness falls, the wind is high,
Dense black clouds fill the western sky;
The storm will soon begin;
The thunders roar, the lightnings flash,
I hear the great round rain-drops dash
Are all the children in?

They're coming softly to my side;
Their forms within my arms I hide—
No other arms are sure!
The storm may rage with fury wild,
With trusting faith each little child
With mother feels secure.

But future days are drawing near—
They'll go from this warm shelter here
Out in the world's wild din;
The rain will fall, the cold winds blow,
I'll sit alone and long to know;
Are all the children in?

Will they have shelter then secure,
Where hearts are waiting strong and sure,
And love is true when tried?
Or, will they find a broken reed,
When strength of heart they so much need,
To help them brave the tide?

God knows it all: his will is best,
I'll shield them now and yield the rest
In his most righteous hand;
Sometimes souls he loves are riven
By tempests wild, and thus are driven
Nearer the better land.

If he should call us home before
The children go, on that blessed shore,
Afar from care and sin,
I know that I shall watch and wait
Till he, the keeper of the gate,
Lets all the children in.

Five Hundred Years Hence.

Scene—Study in the house of an old gentleman in Australia. The old gentleman telegraphs to the servant's room and John appears blown out of a pneumatic tube.

Gentleman—John, go to the carriage house and fill the family balloon. My wife and children will fly to Calcutta about four o'clock to Mr. Johnson's in order to be present at a ball. Then dust my little balloon and fill it also. I must fly immediately to the London exchange, but think, however, that I shall be back before four o'clock, in order to be able to accompany my wife a hundred miles. She will be back about two o'clock. Should it be very dark about this time, have one of the monkeys light the electric light so that it shall illuminate about two or three hundred miles. In the morning I expect several friends from Hong Kong and San Francisco; don't forget, therefore, to telegraph to Paris to Chevet's successor about the pastry a la Napoleon XVIII; say to him that we shall expect it at half past five o'clock, still warm. Tell the cook that yesterday's artificial beefsteak was spoiled by two much nitrogen. Such deplorable carelessness ought never to occur again.—Norristown Register.

Hidden Birds Puzzle.

"The western sky was robing itself in sunset hues, which shot flames over the tree-tops, when a singular kind of accident happened in Ravenna, New Hampshire. A bowl that Miss Dorothy Jay had with her on a picnic was broken by one of two boys wandering around with kites and guns. "Such awkardness in the garcon," Dorothy learnedly said. The boys in wrath rushed through the wood, cocking their guns. The dog Snip escaped lately from the Merrimac, awakening the echoes by his bark, leaped over a brook and followed the trail. "Escape with your life, do, Dorothy," cried Mr. Jack Dawson. Miss Dorothy simply said "chaff." Inch by inch the boys drew nearer, shouting, "Whoop O," exactly like mad Poncas. So wary, however, was Miss Dorothy that the boys in a pet relinquished their design and contented themselves with stealing a silver clasp, arrow-shaped and of fine workmanship.

Do Not Be Deceived.

In these times of quack medicine advertisements everywhere, it is truly gratifying to find one remedy that is worthy of praise, and which really does as recommended. Electric Bitters we can vouch for as being a true and reliable remedy, and one that will do as recommended. They invariably cure Stomach and Liver Complaints, Diseases of the Kidneys and Urinary difficulties. We know whereof we speak, and can readily say, give them a trial. Sold at fifty cents a bottle, by all druggists.

To distinguish wrought and cast iron from steel, produce a bright surface by polishing or filing, and apply a drop of nitric acid, which should be allowed to remain for one or two minutes. Then wash off with water, and the spot will look a pale gray on wrought iron, brownish black on steel, and deep black on cast iron. It is carbon present in various proportions that produces the different appearance.

The Stark County (Wis.) News thought that sermons were pretty good reading for that region, and made a practice of publishing them. One of them appeared with several mistakes, and the reverend gentleman wrote as follows to the editor: "Dear Sir—I wish to correct some mistakes made in publishing my remarks. In the first place, you make me say: 'Satan has a liver.' Now I know nothing about the internal anatomy of the father of lies. He is popularly supposed to have horns, hoofs and a tail, but he is also supposed to be destitute of bowels; at least, the bowels of compassion; and if he has no bowels, he certainly would have no use for a liver. What I wrote was: 'Satan has a lover.'"

PILES! PILES!! PILES!!!

A Sure Cure Found at Last. No One Need suffer.

A sure cure for the Blind, Bleeding, Itching and Ulcerated Piles has been discovered by Dr. Williams (an Indian remedy), called Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment. A single box has cured the worst chronic cases of 25 and 30 years standing. No one need suffer five minutes after applying this wonderful soothing medicine. Lotions, Instruments, and Suppositories do more harm than good. Williams' Ointment absorbs the tumors, allays the intense itching (particularly at night after getting warm in bed), acts as a poultice, gives instant and painless relief, and is prescribed only for Piles, Itching of the private parts, and nothing else.

Read what the Hon. L. M. Shilladerry, of Clewson, says about Dr. Williams' Indian Pile Ointment: "I have used a box of pile cures, but I feel it a duty to say that I have in your ointment the one which gave me instant relief and permanent cure. Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment."

THE WALTER A. WOOD HARVESTING MACHINES

Take the Lead.

In 1853, 500 Machines were sold.
In 1881, 40,413 were sold, and
47,000 have been ordered for 1882.

But the NE PLUS ULTRA of Harvesting Machinery is the Wood Twine Binder. This machine was first put upon the market in 1880, and 4,184 machines were sold that year. In 1881, the sales swelled to 10,034, and orders for over 12,000 have already been received for 1882.

THE WOOD TWINE BINDER!

Possesses these special points of excellence:

1—It is the most perfect automatic self binder ever made.
2—It effects a positive separation of the bound from the unbound grain.
3—The sheaf is formed and compressed without any strain on the twine until the knot is tied.
4—The grain is straightened by the action of the packer as it enters the binder.
5—The automatic uniform sizing of the bundle, thus relieving the driver of the care of stopping and starting the binder.

Last year's machines proved such a perfect success that they will be built substantially the same for 1882, with such improvements in minor details as may be found necessary.

Every farmer desiring to buy a self binder should examine the Wood Twine Binder before purchasing.

THE Adrian Press gives an itemized statement of the work turned out in their job rooms in one week. We see by looking it over that there are in all 29,000 impressions, or about four days' work for one press. Now the question is what did Bro. Stearns do with the rest of his presses during the whole six days?

THE Hillsdale Democrat says that Hon. Albert Dickerman, of that city, will be the next republican nominee for congress from this district, if his own efforts and the efforts of his friends can accomplish that end. He and they have begun early, and propose to continue the work until the close of their convention.

WE have in Tecumseh a good race track which could be made A No. 1 with a small additional expense. The track is surrounded on two sides with good level land and on two sides by road, and the track and land could be rented for a very reasonable sum. The lease of the Fair grounds in Adrian expires this coming fall. The Lenawee County Agricultural Society is in a very weak condition owing to mismanagement and wrangling of different interests, and now is the proper time to put on foot a movement to start a County Fair association here. We have splendid facilities for grounds and all accommodations. There is an abundance of capital in Tecumseh to do it with and if proper management took hold of it plenty of money could be made for the stockholders and the enterprise be of untold value to the business of Tecumseh and vicinity. Let some of our business men stir this matter up.

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION.

Should Lenawee County Pay the Reward for Adrian's Crookedness?

On the night of the 12th of December, 1879, one of Tecumseh's best citizens, a man known and respected throughout the county, was foully dealt with and robbed. He was conveyed to his home for care, and the next day indignation and sorrow was in the heart of every person in our village. A meeting of business men was called and they offered a reward of $500 for the capture of the person or persons who committed this terrible crime. Several days after Lenawee county offered a reward of $250 for the same purpose. Some little time since the people of Adrian were startled by the report that their Mayor, Thomas J. Navin, had quietly yet surely evaporated, having cashed $150,000 in Adrian water bonds. Indignation ran high; the Adrian "bully boy" had cut up so bad a trick. What was left of Adrian's Council held special meetings, day times, nights and Sundays. As the investigation progressed it was discovered that several of Adrian's capitalists were also involved. The excitement was at white heat and yet no one seemed ready to offer any reward for Navin's capture. Finally, a few days since, after the Adrian Council had wrangled until the people throughout the county were sick and tired of the word Navin, Mayor Corbin cast the vote which offered the reward of $1,000 for the capture of said Navin,—immediately the county officials took action about the matter and doubled the pile, offering a reward of $2,000 for the same purpose. And now we would ask the attention of the people to a comparison of these two instances. In the first case a citizen of Lenawee county had life endangered, and it was the business and feeling of every citizen of the county to assist this man and avenge his wrong. For this the noble(?) reward of $250 was offered. In the latter instance a servant or employee, as it were, of the city of Adrian embezzled her funds and fled. The citizens of Adrian did not have sand enough to put up one single cent on his head, and when at last the city of Adrian, being forced by public sentiment, offered a reward, was it just or right to the people of Lenawee county for her officials to double it? Adrian alone elected and put confidence in this man Navin, and it is the business of Adrian and her business men to offer a reward for him if they wish to secure his capture. The county should have nothing more to do with the matter than with an absconding cashier of a bank or bookkeeper of some private concern.

MY AMATEUR FARM.

FOURTH WEEK.

I was born, sir, when the Crab was ascending, and my affairs go backward.—CONGREVE.

Little Mary had a lamb,
Its fleece was white as snow;
And everywhere that Mary went
The lamb was sure to go.
—NURSERY RHYME.

My sheep are genuine Cotswolds. When newly shorn a sheep is about the size of an ordinary dog, but just before shearing time each sheep will easily fill a hogshead. This variety is an excellent one for wool but not so good for lambs. The lambs are tender, and require nearly as much care and attention as orphan children. One of my lambs was an orphan, its mother having been transmogrified into soap grease on the first Monday in April, so I gave it to Columbus to raise by hand as a companion for the baby. He called it "the Captain," and it was already growing into a stalwart lamb. It consumed more new milk than an ordinary ten-year old boy, to say nothing of the turnips and corn meal it made way with. In fact the Captain had gained the position of a permanent member of the family—as much so as the baby and the dog—and in figuring up the weekly allowance for groceries, the Captain was invariably taken into account. To be sure, it was always under foot when any important job was on the tapis, but we soon became accustomed to its eccentricities, and it grew into such a necessary nuisance, that it is doubtful whether Mrs. Columbus could have run the household without it. One of its favorite amusements was chewing the baby's ears. It delighted in taking a daily earth bath in a large gravel pile in the back yard, and in five minutes time it could take on a sufficient load of sand and gravel stones, to keep the kitchen floor sanded a whole day. With these few words of preface, the reader will better comprehend the week's calendar.

Monday, April 25th.—Columbus tackled the fences again this morning. Borrowed three loads of rails from neighbor Gilson across the way, and he drew them over to put on the Barnes' line. As my work was getting behind I hired Homer Gilman for a few days. He was a bright, cross-eyed orphan boy with a stitch in his back and a grass widow for a mother. Homer raked straw mulching off the east strawberry patch. Two lambs died.

Tuesday, April 26th.—Columbus drew rails for the Dutton line fence. Homer raked up cobs in the front door yard. Another lamb wound up its earthly career this forenoon and the Captain came near following suit. It tipped into the water tank at the barn and was rescued by Homer while sinking the third time. An application of flannels externally and ginger tea internally finally brought him to.

Wednesday, April 27th.—Columbus laid new fence on the Barnes' line. He lost his wire cutters in a gopher hole about ten o'clock and had to go down town for a new pair which occasioned nearly two hours' delay. Homer stepped on a broken bottle that some careless person threw into the chip yard, which so intensified the stitch in his back that he had to quit work. Got a sack of bolted meal for the Captain.

Thursday, April 28th.—Columbus laid rail fence all day. Hired John Brown Jones for a week. Jones was a professional gardener, sixty years of age, and had enjoyed forty years experience in raising pickles and sourkrout for the Chicago market. Inasmuch as one hand was disabled with rheumatism, he charged only a dollar a day and his board. He helped Ichabod build fence to-day.

Friday, April 29th.—Columbus and Jones built rail fence on the Dutton line all day.

Saturday, April 30th.—Columbus and Jones laid rail fence till noon. Charley Brent, one of the neighbor's boys, cut the asparagus for market. After dinner we undertook the job of ringing the hogs. I had seven medium sized shoats and old black Susan, the mother of the ten little porkers that made way with the burdock medicine and themselves last week. I got a pair of the newest style, bronzed, double-barreled Wolverine hog ringers and fifty feet of inch rope for a lasso. We drove the hogs into one corner of the yard, gave them a few ears of corn for bait and the fun began. Jones, armed with the ringer and rope took the position of pitcher, Columbus acted as catcher, Charley Brent was short stop, I served as umpire, while the dog and the Captain took the field. Columbus grabbed the smallest victim, the rope was slung over his head, and in five minutes he was let loose with a jewel in his nose. Ichabod then went for old black Susan. Susan is not renowned for her mild temper. She stands three feet six in her stockings and tips the scales at four hundred and eleven pounds, and the man who interferes with her nose is likely to have his hands full. I saw Columbus grab for her, I saw Jones hurl the lasso, I saw the last comet and several hundred shooting stars, and——

When I recovered consciousness and began to pick up the pieces, I found myself under the straw stack minus a coat, Jones was at the water tank bathing a sprained ankle, Charley was searching for a lost hat, Columbus was thrown clean over the gate and dumped head first into the gravel pile, Old Susan had the lasso between her teeth, and stood with triumphant air, calmly awaiting another charge. Charley took Jones home on the wheelbarrow, and the Captain voluntarily went to work to pick the gravel stones out of Ichabod's eyes and ears. The ringing business was indefinitely postponed.

Columbus had a little lamb,
Its fleece was filled with gravel;
And every where Columbus went,
That lamb was sure to travel.

W. E. GLADSTONE AND GLASGOW UNIVERSITY.

ED. HERALD:—I received a few days ago a letter from Scotland, from a cousin, who at my request made some inquiry as to the attendance of the Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone on some of the classes of the University of Glasgow, especially the Greek classes in the winter term of 1823-24, and my cousin had received from Mr. Gladstone's private secretary an answer which tends to solve all the troubles which I found lately in making his attendance there at that time consistent with other well known facts in Mr. Gladstone's early history.

That a Mr. Gladstone and two other young English gentlemen in his company did attend classes then and there, especially the Greek classes under Prof. Sandford, there could be no doubt, as I attended during that same term the senior Greek classes and also Prof. Sandford's private Greek class, and Mr. Gladstone took first prize and myself the second in a translation of a chapter of Homer's Iliad. I give below so much of my cousin's letter as relates to Mr. W. E. Gladstone being at Glasgow University. It seems it was not the Rt. Hon. W. E. who was there, but one of his older brothers. I presume it was the oldest, and now only surviving brother, Sir Thomas. My cousin writes to me as follows:

"You have been mistaken in regard to the idea you had as to W. E. Gladstone being your contemporary at college. In a note I had from his secretary, the Hon Horace Seymour, he says: 'Mr. Gladstone never attended Prof. Sandford's Greek classes, but his brother once did, and hence probably your mistake.'"

Now when I thought that it was W. E. Gladstone who was at Glasgow University in 1823-24, and when I knew that he would have been about two years and two months younger than I was I thought he looked old for his years, but finding that is was an older brother, his appearance seemed more natural. And it always seemed strange that if the premier was the one who went to Glasgow, that none of his biographies made any mention of his ever having been anywhere else at school or college, except at Eton, until he went to Oxford in 1827.

Yours Truly, JOHN J. ADAM.

WE see quite an extended account of a little poker scare in Tecumseh in Tuesday's Adrian Times. The article goes on to state the minute particulars of how a little game was broken up by some cunning joker by an outside rapping and giving his name as Marshall H. W. Stevens. Now in our mind this report seemed a little singular, that is, how the Tecumseh correspondent of the Adrian Times should be able to gain such complete information on this subject as to be able to state in just which cupboard each member of the party escaped, to tell what color was prominent on each man's face and all the other minute details of the occurrence. We would hardly think that there could be an underground connection between said poker player's residence and the worthy correspondent's stopping place.

DR. R. B. HOUSE returned this morning from the Homœopathic State Convention which has been in session at Grand Rapids for the past two days. The convention had a large and profitable session.

W. H. OSBORN, of Milwaukee, his wife and son, are spending a week among their Tecumseh and Macon friends. It is eleven years since Mr. Osborn left his old home to take up his abode in Wisconsin, but it does not seem more than half that length of time. He comes round occasionally to make us a visit and renew old acquaintances.

ONLY one week more is the reason of the great rush at J. A. Eaton & Co's. store for those cheap dress goods, marked down from 40c and 50c to 18c, 25c and 37½c to 12½, 18c and 25c to 8c. Kid gloves from $1 to 50c, ribbons from 40c and 50c to 10c. 100 yd. spool silk 10c, spool twist 3c, prints 4c and 5c, carpets at cost, and many other goods less than cost, as all goods must be sold or moved by June 1st.

J. A. EATON & Co.

YESTERDAY we dropped into the Southern Michigan Carriage Factory on Railroad street, run by Charles Cummins. He has a fine assortment of good carriages and platform wagons on hand, and every department of the business is in fine running order. Mr. Jeff. Fisher is doing the wood work, John Knouse the trimming, and Chiverall Bros. have full charge of the painting and finishing department. They are first-class workmen and are doing painting on old work at bottom rates. Any one having a carriage which needs repainting should give them a call.

FIRE.

A Narrow Escape for Brewer's Foundry —Good Work by our Fire Company.

Last Sunday morning, at 4 o'clock, our people were aroused from their Sunday morning nap by the alarm of fire and every one turned out to see where the fire was, and found the moulding room of Brewer's foundry all in flames. The boys in the fire company started for their respective places, and in a very short time were pouring a good stream of water on the main building, saving it with comparatively no loss to this part of the building or contents.

The fire is supposed to have caught from the cupola as they took off a "heat" late Saturday afternoon. The moulding room alone was burned and the entire loss is about $3,000, which is fully covered by insurance, although the loss to the firm will be great as many patterns were destroyed which will for sometime hinder in their work on Tile machines. The fire was discovered by John Haynes, the night watchman, the alarm promptly given and in as short a time as could be expected by any amateur fire company the engine was doing good work. In this one instance our fire engine has saved more than five times the value of our entire fire fighting outfit, team and all. Brewer's foundry gives more to the support of our village than any other one establishment and their loss would be the loss of every citizen and business man in our village. Work has already commenced rebuilding the moulding room. Mr. Brewer informed us that when finished it will be nearly twice the former size, and with many additional improvements. The firemen did nobly and let us do all we can to encourage them.

[Minneapolis Tribune, May 7, 1882.]

I wish to say to the trade and to the grain growers of the United States, that many times before and since McCormick, et al, commenced their suit, I have examined their patents with the best patent lawyers and experts in the country, and we are satisfied, as we always have been, that they have no claim for an infringement. Suits of this kind have many times before been resorted to by manufacturers of competing machines, thinking that they may gain some advantage in this way. They are old, worn out tricks, and have never prevented the latest, improved and best machines from pushing aside the old styles and taking their places. American farmers generally buy the machine which they think will suit their purpose best, and American manufacturers have always protected the farmer who has bought and the agent who has sold their machines.

I wish to say further, that, notwithstanding the many false statements made by agents for other machines, I am giving my whole attention to the construction and improvement of the Minneapolis Harvester and Twine Binder. No other company has the right to use the latest improvements which I have put upon the "Minneapolis," as the Minneapolis Harvester Works are the sole owners of my latest patents, and I am astonished that some manufacturers claim to have the "Appleby" Binder with my latest improvement, because it is not true, and the public are being deceived by such statements. I have spent the best part of my life in endeavoring to give to the farmer the very best machine for cutting and binding grain. The leading manufacturers of the United States, as well as of Europe, and dealers and farmers all admit that the machines built under my patents are the most perfect yet devised, and they are taking the place of all others.

The Minneapolis Harvester Works are abundantly able to protect every purchaser of their machines, and a suit having been commenced against them, no action can be maintained against the purchaser.

J. F. APPLEBY.

A Good Haul.

On Friday afternoon last, Mr. James Robertson, of Ogden, looked over sundry papers, and counted some ready money he had on hand, his desk being in the parlor of his residence. He left the house shortly after, went to the store about three rods off, and did not return until 9 o'clock. He went into the parlor, for the purpose of closing a window, and chancing to glance at the desk, at once discovered that something was wrong. Investigation showed that thieves or a thief had entered the house during his absence, and had made free with sundry items of personal property. In a small box which was in one part of the desk, Mr. Robertson had counted and left there $98 in money. This was gone. In a large wallet were sundry notes, insurance papers and other documents. Both wallet and contents were missing. But much to Mr. Robertson's satisfaction the rascals had overlooked the greater part of the wealth that was within their reach. The small box spoken of above, which the robbers captured, sat on an insignificant looking bundle incased in newspapers and tied with common twine. But that package contained $300 in gold and $1,[illegible]00 in bills. It will be terrible the way the thieves will swear when they learn this fact.—Adrian Times.

COUNTY CLIPPINGS.

Hudson will have a glass ball shooting contest sometime in June.

Decoration day will be observed in Morenci this year by public exercises.

Rev. E. Dawe has returned to Deerfield to face his accusers. Now, look out for some fun.

One prize of $5,00 in the Commercial Advertiser lottery was drawn by Carrie Pratt, of Deerfield.

The Baptist County Association will hold its annual meeting in the Fairfield church on the 6th day of June next.

Deerfield Record: One of the Dowell boys caught a pickeral in the Raisin, last week, that weighed 11¾ lbs.—It is early for big fish stories, and we begin the season with a big one, but it is nevertheless true.

Morenci Observer: Our townsman, Frank Cawley, will be a resident of Tecumseh during the summer. Mrs. Cawley, who is receiving medical treatment from Dr. Hamilton, of that village, is supposed to be gradually recovering.

Hudson Post: The work of excavating West Main street, preparatory to paving, is being rapidly accomplished by Mr. VanAkin, the contractor.—The work on Railroad street is also progressing, with Mr. Caniff as contractor.

Hudson Gazette: The rain has interrupted work on the West Main street paving job—a sort of temporary injunction by the Almighty. It is feared the event will be without good influence, however, as His relations with members of the Common Council are to remote.

Morenci is enjoying a temperance revival under the auspices of the Sons of Temperance. The Observer says about it:

The temperance boom in the division of the Sons of Temperance continues, and a full dozen, most of whom have been supporters of saloons, are expected to join this evening. Theo. Layton is still at work, and the reform will not stop at present.

Adrian Press: The Central Hotel is undergoing considerable changing in the office and reading room, on the first floor, and the whole is being handsomely papered and decorated by the artist Merritt. Fred and Ralph seem to step naturally into the business of hotel keeping, and report an encouraging patronage.

Adrian Press: At the annual meeting of the Citizens' Association Tuesday evening last the following officials were elected for the coming year: President, Wm. Corbin; First Vice President, Delos Baker; Secretary, C. H. Comstock; treasurer Channing Whitney. Steps were taken looking to the erection of a suitable building to be rented to the straw hat factory, the company being crowded for room.

Blissfield Advance: There is a rumor on the street that on Wednesday Blissfield came near having a suicide. A young married lady, we learn, left the house at which she was stopping; with a declared intention of consigning her mortal remains to the cold damp waters of the Raisin. But she didn't though; she only sat down on the bank, and was there found by the brother of her husband. We did not learn the cause of this strange conduct on her part but presume she had good and sufficient reason for the act.

Good Words for a Good Thing.

All things are not humbugs, nor are all statements lies. Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" is exactly what it claims to be. Hear a word from Mr. Israel H. Snyder, of Saugerties, N. Y. He says: "My little daughter was covered with Salt Rheum from head to foot. Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy cured her altogether, and the disease has never since appeared. This was two years ago." Such words go the point. Get "Favorite Remedy" of your druggist, or write to the Doctor at Rondout, N. Y., $1 a bottle.

—The sale of the Tupper shoe stock by the assignee of the People's Bank has had a very depressing influence on the shoe trade of Tecumseh, it being impossible for dealers, who honestly pay their just debts, to compete with the sale of stock which, marked to sell at bankrupt prices, is then taken possession of by an assignee and sold at one-fourth off. However the trade can take comfort, the stock is fast being disposed of, and Mr. Patterson, the owner of the store, begins June 1 to tear down the building for the purpose of rebuilding a handsomer block, at which date the balance of stock not sold will, we are informed, either be sent to a shoe auction house in Chicago or removed to another town.

MAYBURY, PULLMAN & HAMILTON'S SHOWS.

This exhibition will appear in Tecumseh, Saturday, May 27th. The above show is flatteringly mentioned as follows by the Louisville Sunday Argus.

Notwithstanding the rather inclement weather, the Maybury, Pullman & Hamilton Circus and Menagerie had to contend with it opened Friday afternoon to a very good attendance, and the crowds increased at each subsequent performance. It is safe to say that a better circus exhibition has not been seen in Louisville for a long time, and the menagerie was very good. There are several attractive features in it. Everybody was delighted with the circus, and the performers, one and all proved more than satisfactory. Among the principal acts were the tumbling of the Karl Brothers, Baldwin and the Kiegler Brothers. Their turn was neat and first class in every particular. Mr. W. H. Gorman's hurdle riding was repeatedly applauded, and Miss Sallie Marks, the little equestrienne, carried off a large share of the honors. Miss Pauline Lee also did herself justice as an equestrienne of note. Prof. Neil Smith's troupe of trained dogs is one of the best ever seen. The contortion act of Ajax is a very strong one, and little Blanche Pullman is very expert in her ball rolling and rope skipping. The Belmonts are excellent trapeze performers. Praise can be bestowed on all the performers. The M., P. & H. circus ought to do well on the road.

A Minnesota Deer Hunter.

While hunting in the pineries of Minnesota I once met an old half-breed who taught me more in a few days than I ever learned before or since. It was when I compared my scanty superficial knowledge with his sound practical lore that I discovered the lamentable extent of my ignorance and how much I had to learn. This old veteran was about fifty years of age, and he had hunted deer for more than thirty-five years, making it a specialty. It can be readily understood that his advice was worth taking, and I am only sorry I did not prolong my hunt with him, as every deer brought out new stratagems, and every move was checkmated by this unerring, steady old Nimrod. He was a regular hound, and could find more game than three ordinary hunters; but, what an anomaly! he could not shoot. Actually, if a deer moved, or even wagged his ears, the old fellow would quietly wait till he was stock still, and then blaze away. Sometimes he would kill, but that was by no means a foregone conclusion; and as he would insist on using a single barred muzzle-loading rifle, of course the deer was off before he could "do it some more." To miss with him seemed rather a matter to be expected than one to get mad about, so, nothing daunted, he would reload his rifle, sit on a log, light his pipe, soliloquize and ascribe reasons for his maladroitness, and make wise resolutions for the future, and having put in about half an hour, go ahead, take up the track of the doomed deer, and eight times out of ten get another shot, with varying results, inside of an hour.

How he did it I could never tell! all that I know is that I have followed him for days from morn till dusk, and have seen him shoot three or four times at the same deer in a day, and generally bag him in the long run. When we became better acquainted, it was mutually agreed and understood that he would do the finding and I the shooting; and by that means we generally had the pleasure of hanging up a deer or two a day without his firing a shot. At first I ascribed his finding the deer merely to good luck, but I soon got over that. He would follow a fresh track a short distance, and without giving any reason, and guided by an unerring judgment, which was simply supernatural, would leave it or strike out at right angles and shortly come upon the same track or else point out the deer, perhaps fifty or one hundred yards away, sniffing and watching his back track, while his foes were either in his flank or rear. On such an occasion it was merely a matter of target shooting with me and not interesting, being entirely too mechanical, so that I frequently purposely made a noise to start the unsuspecting stag to give him a chance.

This conduct on my part was sure to be followed by a blessing from the veteran, who recognized no rules or laws governing such shots, and as I seldom missed, it was difficult to make him perceive the difference, as in any case the deer was "venison." One day I missed clear and clean, and as he doe kept out of my sight I could not shoot again. The old man, in a fit of rage at my blundering in having made the deer run before I fired at him, threw up his rifle and, without taking any aim, let fly. Down came the doe, all in a heap, shot through the neck, and dead as a nail. The funny part is that to this day the old fellow thinks I did the killing; whereas only I red one shot and that was away high.

This man's antipathy to a breech loader amounted to actual hatred, and it was only after repeatedly showing him its advantages that he so far condescended as to allow me to hunt with him while carrying my repeater. I shall never forget the queer expression on his tough, weather beaten countenance when at last I convinced him of the superiority of the repeating rifle.—Forest and Stream.

Fuel Here and There.

One of the discomforts of a winter in Continental Europe is the lack of such fires for heating as we think essential in American houses. If one has a long purse, and does not mind the expense, they can be had there as here, but were one in Paris or Rome to indulge in such roaring fires as we keep constantly going in furnaces and grates, it would be regarded even by the wealthy as an extravagance surpassing that of the Roman Emperors. To be sure, the houses are so built as not to be as susceptible of changes of temperature as those in which the majority of our people live. The walls and partitions are thicker, the windows and doors closer fitted, and they retain the heat longer. Then the stoves in use there for heating are constructed so that a comparatively small part of the heat is wasted. But even with all these precautions an American, accustomed to generous and blazing coal and wood fires, finds the apartments warmed sufficient for the comfort of the native cold, and shivers as he recalls the fires blazing on his native hearth.

He learns with surprise in Paris that the wood with which his dinner is cooked or his shins warmed is sold by the pound, and is weighed out to the purchaser as carefully as butter, sugar, or coffee. A handful of twigs, such as in America would be allowed to rot, costs five cents, and better wood at proportionate prices. So fires on the continent are a luxury, and in many houses are, except for cooking, not seen the year round.

But if fires are expensive and fuel scarce and high in Continental Europe, what shall we say of Japan, where charcoal, split wood, brush and dried grass are used for cooking and heating booths and is hardly ever used outside the cities for purely heating purposes.

The charcoal is made in wooded regions, and carried to the settlements in straw sacks on the backs of men and horses. A good comfortable fire, such as our people must have to keep them warm, would cost several dollars a day.

But our extravagance in fuel diminishes with the years and the increasing cost of fuel. We will travel a good ways, and have then to seek communities remote from railroads, to find such wood fires as kept the log cabins and thin frame houses of the pioneers warm. The great fire places, with their wide fronts and immense chimneys, their great andirons, back-logs, fore-logs, and sections of seasoned split wood four or five feet long, piled high, are hardly known save in remote settlements. But we make almost as extravagant use of coal as our fathers did of wood, and will probably continue to do so till the cost of it compels a study of economy in the methods of heating houses, and servants are instructed how to manage fires so as to secure the most heat with the least amount of fuel.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Of the hair is often promoted by using Parker's Hair Balsam. It always restores the youthful color and lustre to gray hair, gives it new life and removes all irritation and dandruff.

SHE SAW HIM A FEW BETTER.—The public has long conceded that the power of the hotel clerk is superior to that of president. A new rival has sprung up in the railroad ticket agent, as was demonstrated at an Iowa station a few weeks ago.

"I want a ticket to B——," said a well-known lady of the town, just before train time.

"Twenty-four cents," responded the agent, working his sausage machine. She laid down a silver quarter. Being well acquainted and a practical joker, the agent drew up from his pocket a glittering pants button, passed it over with the ticket, and scooped up the quarter.

"Is that a legal tender?" asked the lady quietly.

"Oh, yes," he answered with mock gravity, "they are the mainstay of the republic."

She pocketed it and got aboard, leaving the agent's face corrugating with smiles.

A few days after he told it to a brigade of runners buying tickets for B——, and while he was enjoying the encore, the lady appeared with—

"Ticket for B——, please."

"Twenty-four cents," with a sly wink at the runners. He laid down the ticket. She scooped it and laid down twenty-four dazzling pants buttons, exactly like the first.

"You said they were legal tender. They go a long ways supporting the family," she chirped sweetly, as she bowed from the presence of more than presidential prerogative.

Nine Physicians Outdone.

It is generally considered a pretty difficult task to outdo a physician, but the following will conclusively prove where nine were completely outdone. Mrs. Helen Pharviz, 331 Dayton St., Chicago, Ill., was treated for Consumption by nine physicians, and all pronounced her case incurable. Seven bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, completely cured her. Doubting ones, please drop her a postal card and convince yourselves. Sold by all druggists.

Disease is an effect, not a cause. Its origin is within; its manifestations without. Hence, to cure the disease the cause must be removed, and in no other way can a cure ever be effected. WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY AND LIVER CURE is established on just this principal. It realizes that of all diseases arise from deranged kidneys and liver, and it strikes at once at the root of the difficulty. The elements of which it is composed act directly upon these great organs, both as a food and a restorer, and by placing them in a healthy condition, drive disease and pain from the system.
For the innumerable troubles caused by unhealthy Kidneys, Liver and Urinary Organs; for the distressing Disorders of Women; for Malaria, and for physical derangements generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

DR. A. FRASER'S
MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.
It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.
The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.
WHAT IT CURES.
All SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, INFLAMMATION of LUNGS and BOWELS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, PLAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, KIDNEYS, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all disorders attendant with INFLAMMATION.
It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood; this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.
Over 40 Years
This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.
Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

How to Use Bones.

Plant food is concentrated in bones, and most gardeners, who make a business of raising fruit and vegetables, appreciate their value. The great drawback to their use is the difficulty of reducing them to sufficient fineness so that plants may immediately appropriate them. If bone mills were more common and the adulteration of the ground bone were less frequent, this excellent fertilizer would be more commonly used. Even without bone mills there is no use in wasting the bones, if one has a garden. We have applied them with great profit in several ways. In tree planting they are almost indispensable. They can be had of village boys generally for about twenty-five or fifty cents a barrel. They pick them up about the streets, gardens, slaughter houses, the remnants of butcher's meat sold to families. This kind of bone is fine enough to be put into borders for grape vines, without any preparation. A bushel of these bones to a newly planted tree is none too much, and one may safely plant five bushels under a bearing apple or pear tree, or grape vine. So large results will not follow immediately from these course pieces as from the ground article, or from superphosphates. But there will be in the soil a supply of food for many years to come, and the roots will appropriate it as they have need. We have frequently taken up grape vines planted in this way, and found the whole mass of bone, once solid, penetrated with fine roots. We doubt if any investment in fertilizers pays better than in these bones from butchers' meat, which are quite plentiful in all our villages. Another method of using them is with the preparation of the hammer or stone sledge. This requires some expenditure of muscle or of money. The common bones are tough, and require heavy blows to crush them. Parts will be crushed quite fine and some will remain in inch pieces. They may by applied to the soil for all ordinary crops, especially for turnips, in this partly broken state, with profit. It is still better however, to reduce them to a finer state, by fermentation in a compost heap, or by treating with wood ashes. If they are put into a cask and mixed with alternate layers of wood ashes, and kept moist, they will soon go to pieces, and the fine mixture will have a large accession of potash and be made more valuable and better adapted to crops that want a good deal of potash. If wood ashes are not convenient the bones may be fermented in a compost heap with good garden soil. Put them into any fermenting mass of vegetable or animal matter and the bones will add to the heat and become very fine. After the fermentation is over, the whole mass should be shovelled over, and intimately mixed, and it may be spread broadcast or put in the hill as a concentrated manure. This way is good enough, though it requires more time than the reduction of bone by sulphuric acid, which costs money, and requires more careful handling. We have used bones in all these methods, with great profit, for thirty years, and expect to use them while we eat the fruit of the garden. Never throw away any of the bones.

Lassoing a Wild-Cat.

A pleasant drive of twenty-eight miles brought us to the famous Bluff Creek ranch, where the great heathen missionary, the Rev. John Glenn, is resident pastor and distributor of food, raiment and German mineral water to the footsore, the weary and the thirsty. Two miles from the parson's the range of the Doctor "takes holt." After crossing this we observed in the distance a solitary horseman, who on closer examination proved to be one of the Doctor's henchmen. While talking cow to him a tremendous wildcat, fully four feet long, jumped up in front of us and started for the brush, but the rowels were already in the flanks of Charles' horse, and at a breakneck speed, the lariat curving its graceful and certain coils above his head went pursuer and pursued. When within twenty-five feet of his catship the lariat was thrown, and, uncircling like the wierd chain of a magician, landed its fatal noose around Loudon's neck. Never was a wildcat of any description in a tighter embrace; horse at full run, the rope fastened to the horn of the saddle, and the game making unwilling jumps of twenty to thirty feet. This, however, only lasted a few hundred feet, when the cat catching the rope with her teeth snapped it as if it were a new string. Charley, finding that his line was empty and his hook gone (as a fisherman would say,) returned to look at the dead quadruped. Dead! "He was not dead but sleeping." For with a yell and two bounds he cleared at least forty feet, and fastening one set of claws in Charles' leggins and the other in the hip of the horse he seemed to insist on a ride and a square meal. But for the presence of mind of the rider and his luck in having a three pound loaded quirt, with which he mashed the animal's skull, we rather opine he would have been the best mounted wildcat in the cattle regions of the West.—[Ford County Globe.

It was to make him the "right kind of a boy" that a father in Newark, O., subjected his son to a discipline that borders dangerously near diabolism. "The stick I put on his tongue," he said on the trial of the case, "was a flat hickory stick an inch wide, and one-fourth of an inch thick. I split it back over half way, put an ordinary carpet tack in the top part of the stick, had him put his tongue in, and pressed down with my thumb and finger, and he pulled his tongue out. I put it on several times. I punished him in this way to make an impression on his mind."

of the weather and other drawback inseparable from the opening exhibition of the season, were very successful. The crowd at the afternoon performance was not as large as usually attend circuses here, owing to the rain which was falling at the time, but nevertheless it was by no means a small crowd, and at night it was all that could have been desired. The show is a good one. The menagerie is interesting, while the ring performance is a long and varied one of much merit. All the features cannot be mentioned, but it would be unfair not to give praise to the splendid horsemanship of Gorman, who in his numerous bareback feats, displayed admirable skill and daring. The Zieglers and Baldwins, in their athletic performances, were remarkrbly effective, as was the young "Ajax" in his fine contortions. The Belmonts were consummate masters of the trapeze and added no little to the entertainment of the exhibition. The trained dogs and pony were perfect in their way, and were certainly among the most pleasing features of the show. Little Blanche Pullman, in her ball rolling and rope skipping was wonderfully expert, and Sallie and Willie Marks, in their double equestrianship were capital. The circus has an excellent clown in the shape of a dog

In the matter of the estate of Lucinda Bodine, deceased.

A SPRING DEFENSE.

How to Repel the Assaults of Ill Health—Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY Means Something for You.

The months of March, April and May are the three successive arches of a bridge which connects the season of ice and sleet with that of leaves and roses. No less in respect of health than of outward natural phenomena is this true. Spring is a trying season for invalids, and particularly for those who either suffer, or are liable to suffer from Biliousness, Kidney complaint and Constipation of the bowels, and for women who are chronically subject to any of the long catalogue of physical ailments to which their delicate sex is heir. Indications of disease in spring should be heeded at once. A fatal attack may easily result from neglect or a disordered condition of the bowels. The power of prevention may be had where loss of energy or attempted cure—may be wasting, are you vexed or troubled in spring with indigestion, languid or disordered liver, want of appetite, constipation, or a feverish state of the skin? If so, take without an hour's unnecessary delay Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. No medicine is so harmless and yet so quick and positive in its action. It is Nature's own idea, condensed and made tangible by human skill. Do not leave home when going upon a journey without a bottle of it in your valise. You cannot possibly put one dollar in any other shape where it can render you so essential service. The Favorite Remedy is almost instantaneous in its action, but does not tear you to pieces with its violence nor nauseate you with disgust. It frees the liver from bile and sets the machinery of your body into normal and healthy operation. Remember Dr. D. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. Ask your druggist for it and take nothing else. Price One Dollar a bottle.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

GUITEAU MUST HANG.

The "Post" of Monday has the following positive statement:

Chief Justice Carter, and Judges MacArthur, Hagner, and James held consultations Saturday, summing up the arguments of counsel in the application of Guiteau for a rehearing. The consultation lasted four hours, and was marked by the most searching examination of authorities, and a most rigorous analysis of every point made in the arguments. The judges were in thorough harmony all through, and in reaching decision, not for one minute differing in the general steps by which the decision was reached; although, of course, each judge had individual opinions on the various points of law and their application. The decision will be announced May 22. The decision affirms the sentence of the court below, of course excluding the exceptions. This disposes of Guiteau's last chance. He will be hanged June 30, 1882.

The case of Surgeon Major was before the cabinet Friday, but it is stated that the president is not quite ready to take action.

The senate select committee on woman suffrage has agreed to recommend for adoption a joint resolution providing that the right of citizens of the United States to vote, shall not be denied or abridged on account of sex.

Texas Republicans here say that the President has given assurances that he will certainly make the long-delayed appointments in that State before the close of the present week.

Dr. Logan, of Kansas, the new United States Minister to Chili, who reached Washington some days ago from Central America, has been quite ill since his arrival. As soon as he shall have fully recovered and receive his instructions, he will take his departure for his new post of duty.

The pension appropriation bill has been completed. It sets aside $100,000,000 for the next fiscal year, of which nearly all is on army account. The bill provides that the income from the navy pension fund shall be devoted to the needs of that branch of the service, so far as it goes.

Arrangements are making to communicate this summer with the Arctic signal-service station at Point Barrow and Lady Franklin's Bay. Negotiations are pending for the charter of a suitable ship at San Francisco to take stores.

Senator Davis, of Illinois, laid before the senate the resolutions recently adopted by the Illinois Legislature, to the effect that the United States Government should demand the speedy trial and unconditional release of all American citizens imprisoned in Ireland as suspects. The resolutions were referred to the committee on foreign relations.

The Congressional joint committee on the library has purchased Mr. E. F. Andrews' full-length portrait of President Garfield for the White House. It is the same picture which was in the hall of Representatives, over the Speaker's desk, on the day of the Garfield memorial services, Feb. 27.

The Committee on Postoffices and Post Roads have several bills already reported to the House, one of which they will attempt to pass under a suspension of the rules. One of these is the bill providing for the establishment of postal savings banks, which is a very popular measure, and may be brought up on Tuesday.

Representative Willbora, of Texas, who for the past four years has represented the largest constituency in the United States, says that the reapportionment of the State leaves him with a population of about 160,000 people, and the successful nominee this coming fall a majority of 11,000 Democratic votes.

The Hon. Rollin M. Daggett, ex-Representative from Nevada, is to be appointed United States Minister to Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands. Mr. Daggett is a practical printer, has had considerable experience as an editor, the last editorial chair filled by him being that of the Territorial Enterprise, and he is the author of several literary works.

Several Democratic Senators have indicated their determination to antagonize the bill which passed the House the other day creating a department of agriculture. The Senate Agricultural Committee, however, is understood to favor the measure and some of them are in favor of adding two or three bureaus, such, for instance, as the railroads, public lands, and national survey.

The comptroller of the currency says that twenty-two saving banks have failed in New York city and vicinity, and that the expense of closing up their affairs under the state laws was 16 per cent. of the whole amount of dividends paid to creditors. During the operations of the national banking system seven national banks have failed in New York city and Brooklyn, and all but one have been finally closed, at an expense of only 8 per cent. of the total sum collected. The total loss to depositors through these national bank failures is $90,000.

The army appropriation bill remains in the senate committee on appropriations, and has only once been briefly discussed. There is reason to believe that the provision making retirement compulsory after forty years of service will be stricken out. Two or three members of the committee have expressed opinions adverse to this provision, and it is not known that it meets with favor from any of them. There is also a disposition to make the age at which retirement is compulsory 65 instead of 62 years, as in the house bill, but it is not certain that this will be done.

Senator Hawley has introduced a bill to set apart a tract of land about seventy miles square, in Arizona, as a public park, to be reserved under supervision and control of the secretary of the interior, like the Yosemite or Niagara park. The boundaries of the proposed new park are the parallels of 34 degrees 15 minutes north latitude and 33 degrees 15 minutes north latitude and the meridians of 111 degrees 45 minutes and 112 degrees 45 minutes west longitude, embracing a portion of what is known as the Kaibab plateau and portions of the Marble and Grand canyons of the Colorado river.

Commissioner Stephens, of Indiana, has a report ready to present to the committee on military affairs, providing for the retirement of non-commissioned officers of the army on three-quarters pay. The law at present makes no provision for this class, and the effect is bad on the army. There are many sergeants who are old men, and who are practically of little or no use to the service, but they are retained because it would be hardship to faithful men to discharge them for disabilities. It is believed that if the bill shall pass to retire on the same conditions as those of higher rank, the soldiers will be better satisfied and the service benefited. Three-quarters pay, which the bill provides, is only about what a pension would amount to, so that it will not be a very heavy drain on the treasury. It is believed that the measure will find favor in congress.

It is understood that Charles H. Reed, Guiteau's counsel, will fight it out to the end. If the supreme court of the District in general term shall refuse to set aside the verdict, he will apply for a writ of habeas corpus in the supreme court of the United States. He will carry the question of jurisdiction and the alleged illegal date of the execution to the highest tribunal in the country for final adjudication. Lawyers are looking with special interest for the decision of the court in banc on the question of the jurisdiction of a court trying a criminal for an offense committed in one state and which culminated in another, as in the case of Guiteau. It looks as though the disposition of Guiteau might be still some distance in the future.

The indulgence granted the wretch Guiteau by the warden of the jail who has him in custody has become so notorious that Senator Hawley, of Connecticut, has called the attention of the senate thereto by introducing a resolution directing the committee on the District of Columbia to inquire into the management of the jail in this District with refgrence to privileges granted to prisoners and the freedom with which visitors are admitted. He referred to a recent escape from the jail, and to the newspaper reports that a notorious prisoner now there holds a daily levee, and receives on Sunday from sixty to one hundred visitors. He deprecated this as ministering to a morbid curiosity and prejudicial to public morals. He, of course, referred to Guiteau as the condemned criminal, and Howgate as the escaped prisoner. The warden of the jail—alarmed, perhaps because of the manner in which he has allowed Guiteau to add to his notoriety—has ordered that the daily levees the wretch has held all winter be broken up. Guiteau continues in excellent health, and appears in good spirits, but evidently realizes his situation, and seems more serious than formerly.

Senator Sherman has introduced a bill for the preservation of the woods and forests of the national domain adjacent to the sources of the navigable rivers and their affluents in the United States. It provides that all the public timbered lands adjacent to the sources of the navigable rivers and their affluents be withdrawn from public sale and entry; that Maj. Gen. Wright, chief of the corps of engineers, United States army; Maj. Gen. William B. Hazen, commanding the signal corps; Dr. George B. Loring, commissioner of agriculture, and Prof. Spencer F. Baird, secretary of the Smithsonian institution, shall form a commission for the examination of the subject of the preservation and cultivation of woods and forests adjoining the sources of the navigable rivers and their affluents, for the purpose of preserving the same and increasing their growth by planting there and along the course of said rivers where land is timberless, so that said rivers may be kept in a navigable condition by promoting a continuous supply from their sources and affluents, the fact having become universally known that the destruction of the woods causes all countries to become arid and unprofitable deserts.

The Sons of Temperance of this place have their Division boomed up by the sound of one of B. J. Coller's fine organs.

We are glad to see Mr. James Miller, who has been unable to get out since town meeting, around again.

Uncle Henry Smith is also able to get up town once more.

The S. C. B. went to Brooklyn last Saturday evening to play for the opening of Mrs. A. G. Evans' ice cream parlors, and report a very enjoyable time. On account of rain they found it most agreable to come home pretty good season the next morning.

Although most farmers have their corn planted many of them feel as though it would be just as well in the crib these frosty nights.

The Sons of Temperance are to have an ice cream festival on Friday evening, June 2. A good literary is being talked of and a pleasant time is anticipated. All are invited.

Who was out Sunday night? Don't you tell.

A new time card is expected on the Wabash next week, but has not been received yet. A later train out of Detroit is a fore gone conclusion which the local travel have been wishing for ever since the road opened.

As summer opens up the cow-at-large nuisance begins to pester those who have too much respect for their neighbors to serve them so mean a trick as to undertake to pasture their door yards and gardens. A certain one on North street will be taken care of if the owner doesn't.

MAYBURY, PULLMAN & HAMILTON'S SHOWS.

This exhibition will appear in Tecumseh, Saturday, May 27th. The above show is flatteringly mentioned as follows by the Louisville Courier-Journal:

Maybury, Pullman & Hamilton's "Grand United Mastodon Show," so designated on the bills, gave two performances in Louisville yesterday, which, considering the disadvantages of the weather and other drawbacks inseparable from the opening exhibition of the season, were very successful. The crowd at the afternoon performance was not as large as usually attend circuses here, owing to the rain which was falling at the time, but nevertheless it was by no means a small crowd, and at night it was all that could have been desired. The show is a good one. The menagerie is interesting, while the ring performance is a long and varied one of much merit. All the features cannot be mentioned, but it would be unfair not to give praise to the splendid horsemanship of Gorman, who in his numerous bareback feats, displayed admirable skill and daring. The Zieglers and Baldwins, in their athletic performances, were remarkrbly effective, as was the young "Ajax" in his fine contortions. The Belmonts were consummate masters of the trapeze and added no little to the entertainment of the exhibition. The trained dogs and pony were perfect in their way, and were certainly among the most pleasing features of the show.—Little Blanche Pullman, in her ball-rolling and rope skipping was wonderfully expert, and Sallie and Will Marks, in their double equestrianship, were capital. This circus has an excellent clown in the shape of a dog.

Good News.

No more Chills and Ague in this section. Our Druggist is selling an article called "Ague Conqueror." It is about the only satisfactory preparation sold for the cure of Fever and Ague, Dumb Chills, Intermittent or Billious Fevers. The proprietor of the Ague Conqueror has used but little energy to make this medicine known, and yet its sales are immense in Ague Districts. It purifies the blood, Liver and other Secretory organs so effectually that the Chills do not return even when persons have had them for years. Entirely vegetable preparation. Price 50 cents and $1,00 per Bottle. Two doses will stop the chills.

MAYBURY, PULLMAN & HAMILTON'S show will exhibit at Tecumseh, on Saturday, May 27, a pair of twin baby elephants, pronounced to be the only pair of twin baby elephants ever seen together. They are well tamed and will take a foremost rank in their holiday street parade.

TO-DAY.

Don't tell me of to-morrow!
If we look upon the past,
How much that we have left to do
We cannot do at last.
To-day! it is the only time
For all on this frail earth!
It takes an age to form a life—
A moment gives it birth.

Don't tell me of to-morrow!
Give me the man who'll say,
Where'e'er a good deed's to be done,
Let's do the deed to-day.
We may all command the present,
It never and never will,
But repentance is the phantom
Of the past that comes too late.

BEWITCHED IN MID OCEAN.

A SAILOR'S YARN.

"Thrice the brindled cat hath mewed."

Old superstitions, like old religions, take a great deal of killing. About no four-footed creature have religious beliefs or superstitions clung more tenaciously than about the cat, from the feline deity of Egypt, and the gaunt grimalkin of the witches, to the tame tabby of our fireside. It is difficult, however, to believe that in the quarter of the nineteenth century and among sane Englishmen, pussy should ever be an object of fear and foreboding. Yet hear the story of my friend, the captain of the Seamew, recently come into port after an unusually stormy and strange passage from Baltimore:

We had a capital run for several days. After dropping down the river, we gave her sheet across the cold belt of water that lies along the coast, and out we "swished" into the stream and away along it.

"Jack," says I to my mate, who has sailed with me in the Seamew for many a year, "Home in thirty days. Eh?"

"Humph," said Jack, "maybe." Jack was a Scotchman, and cautious about an opinion.

Well, on March 14 (I have reason to remember the date) a little after 12 o'clock, in latitude 41 degrees north and longitude 53 degrees west (I had just taken our bearings and remember 'em), I was sweeping round with my glass careless like, when I sighted a ship on our starboard bow. I had a good look; she was a bark, and was flying signals of distress. I called Jack.

"Jack," said I, when he had looked, "what do you think? We must bear down on her, I suppose?"

"Humph," said Jack. "Ay, I suppose."

We shortened sail and bore down. We came within hail, but nobody answered from the bark. Presently, though, a boat was launched and pulled toward us; but their pulling was weak and "dippy."

Then a man stood up in the middle of the boat, tugged his coat off and waved it and sang out "Ahoy! Ahoy!" in a half-cracked kind of way. This was odd, and I tramped up and down, impatient to hear what they wanted.

"We are starving!" That's what the captain that stood up in the middle said. "We are starving," said he. "The Lily, of Plymouth, outward bound for Baltimore."

We got 'em up the side. I took the master into the cabin, and sent the men for'ard. Lord! to hear that man drink and eat! With a delirious eagerness, as you might say, and yet afraid to eat too fast or too much. He knew he must keep in his awful appetite, and still it would keep breaking from him. He told us their story in scraps between. They had been provisioned for three months, and that was their 125th day out! The weather they had experienced had been most peculiar; not stormy, but playful and perverse-like; sometimes blowing this way, sometimes that, often not blowing at all. Nearly eleven weeks had gone by before they sighted Cape Henry, and when they did, down came a furious, sprawling nor'wester, and drove 'em out to sea again. And so they had beaten about in adverse winds, of course, ever since. Their last drop of water and their last scrap of biscuit went five days ago. Then they came to cooking their boots, and sucking the oil from the lamps, even from the binnacle.

"We ate my dog last!" And the poor fellow burst into tears. "As sure as fate," said he, looking oddly at me, "we have been betwitched."

"Bewitched!" said I. "What now—what makes you think of such a thing?"

"Ah, well," said he, "I don't know. But we'll see."

After that he was in a hurry to return to his ship. We filled their boat and a boat of our own with all the provisions we thought we could spare (and there was thirteen of 'em, an awkward number to feed.) Jack went with our boat, and when he came back says he to me:

"That skipper's not a bad sort, though he be a Cardiff man. He's sent ye this keg o' spirits—and it may be as well out o' their way now—and, what d'ye think? four bottles o' champagne in the basket here! They had thought o' saving them for land sight, but he's sent them to you."

We looked in the basket of champagne at once. The bottles lay sloped in with their heads out. Underneath was a little packing straw, and underneath that—oh, Jack's face and language when he saw it!—a tabby, a brindled cat lying curled up asleep.

Oh!" cried Jack. "Oh the sly, ungrateful devil. This is your Welshman, your Taffy! This is what he thought he was bewitched wi'! And he's been afraid to make away wi' it! So he sends the witchcraft here! The coward he is! But we'll play Jonah's trick, and chance the whale."

So he seized the cat and swung out his arm to toss it overboard; when my little Maggie, that sailed with me this voyage, and that scarce understood his words, but understood his action, caught his wrist and cried:

"Oh, no please; Jack! Give it to me."

Now Jack was very fond of her, so he arrested his act at her bidding at once; but he said, "It's bewitched, though, Maggie, lass. If I don't believe in that sort o' thing, there's them here that do," with a glance at the men for'ard.

"Ay, sir, there be," said Dick Sandys, an old seaman who had been standing by all the while helping to haul up the boat by the davit line, and keeping, as I had observed, a sidelong eye on the basket. "There's them aboard this here Seamew, and I don't say as what I ain't one on 'em myself, as 'll straight off begin to think the rare luck of this here present voyage is gone. But they'll dread worse luck, sir, if ye throw overboard a brindled cat as has been carried dead across water."

"Is that so?" asked Jack.

"Yes," said I, in a low voice. "I've heard that before. But," said I aloud, and looking at Dick, and trying to work off my uneasiness in a joke, "how can you have a 'sea' or any other 'mow' without a cat?"

"This cat," said Jack, "scarcely looks as if she would mew again. Just look at her—skin and bone."

My little Maggie had waked her up with stroking, and the wretched creature tried to stand and to walk, rubbing against Maggie's leg. But she fell over again and again. Jack caught the animal up, and sniffed her breath, while she gave him an averted look, which to me seemed almost human.

"S'elp me," cried Jack. "If they haven't made her drunk, so that she should come here quiet! Did ye ever see a cat like her!"

When Maggie carried the cat into the cabin I tramped up and down the deck, more uneasy than I cared to let myself know. It was not (as I told Jack) that I was a believer in the superstitions about cats which many sailors still encourage, but because I knew what desperate work it would be, if anything should happen, to keep in hand a crew that had given themselves up.

It was getting on in the afternoon, and I was still tramping to and fro, when that cat rushed on deck, with Maggie after it. It jumped up on the bulwarks, and, looking and poking its nose over the water, mewed. It leaped back to the deck, and ran along toward the fo'c'sle and round the caboose, and stopped and mewed again. It ran back toward me, and looked round and mewed a third time; and its mewing was loud and distressful, as if wanting to be let out or let in. Maggie followed, calling "Puss, puss! poor pussy!" And there was I, and Jack, and further off all the crew looking on and wondering at the creature's movements and cries. There were peculiar one-sided glances and head shakes, I saw, exchanged by the men. To discourage any notice there might be that I also felt concern, I turned to walk up and down as before, having first lit my pipe. What did that cat do but trot off at my heels, looking up and mewing with a kind of bitter greediness, as if I were the cat's nearest man!

"Catch it, Maggie," I said, "and give it something to eat."

"I've given it something, father," said Maggie, "and it won't eat it. But maybe it will now;" and she managed to seize and carry it off.

Now, standing still, I noticed that the smoke of my pipe, instead of being blown away, was curling slowly about my head, rising a little and forming a bit of cloud, and, then melting away straight up. I did not like the looks of these signs. There was a change working around in the weather, of which, but mo'tell you, the glass had given no warning.

We had been having a clear sky and a fresh breeze; the breeze fell slack, our sails flapped and "bilged," like as if in disgust, and the most curious dimness and thickness came down around the ship. I am too old a sailor to make a note of every odd change in the look of the sea or sky, but that was the oddest change I ever saw in mid-ocean. I have read a deal of poetry at sea, and I used to write home pieces to Maggie's mother, when she was alive, God bless her! and so I have always by me a sort of taste and eye for what you would call "poetic effects." Well, the effect that day as the nor'west breeze fell dead, and the sun began to go down, I shall never forget. It became very cold, and mysterious looking haze gathered about the ship in a circle that got always narrower and narrower, till we had not a hundred feet of clear blue all round. The sea lost its briskness and ripple, it took on a dull, steely, oily look, and glided and slid about as if it were the back of a monstrous whale. We seemed at the bottom of a pit of darkness and dirtiry; and the bottom we rested on was the fathomless Atlantic! All around us the encroaching haze, and the rising behind and above it a dense dark wall of cloud, touched, in the West, at its lofty broken edges with the dim glory of the setting sun, and showing a little space of pale, pure blue above, and in the east and south appearing like an inaccessible gray cliff. From the depths of this cliff seemed to come by and by faint-labored sighs, which gradually became wilder and prolonged themselves into wails of distress and pain. We shortened sails at once down to the lower topsails.

Between 9 and 10 I tucked my little Maggie safe in her berth, and turned in myself, though I knew it would be only for a little while. That cat I did not see anywhere about.

I was wakened suddenly by my head being bumped against the side of my berth. There was a loud report, like the going off of twenty muskets; I felt a sudden spasm as of choking; I caught at my berth and sprang to my feet. You have never been in a hurricane, I dare say? Well, when it first swoops down, it seems to shut you and the ship up with too much breath. In another minute I was on deck; the report had been the noise of a sheet blown to pieces. Jack was roaring through the trumpet, the men were shortening sail—you could just hear the sharp creak of ropes and pulleys through the wind—and that wretched cat was hid somewhere about, mewing its worst. It was 2 o'clock in the morning, hurricane from the northeast with bitter rain, and we lay-to with the lee clew of the lower maintopsail. All on till dawn and through the day it blew and shrieked its loudest. Two men were at the wheel to keep her head up, but I knew that for all that we were driving rapidly back on our track. The drift in the air was so dense that we could not see five yards beyond the ship; and by 5 o'clock it was dark. About 6 o'clock a great sea struck our bows, carried away our head, and let a rush of water like a millrace over our decks. We recoiled a great distance and settled heavily in the trough of the sea. But we rose again with a shudder.

On the second day, after daylight, the hurricane abated, though it still blew a stiff gale. But we were able to slacken something of the grim tenacity of our vigilance, and to look at each other again. I liked not the looks I met. We had passed with comparatively little damage through a terrible danger; and that would have been enough, you would have thought, to lead the sailors to think that both weather and ship were under altogether different and better guidance than the witchery of a tabby cat. Yet they looked sullen and hopeless. I could see from the way they eyed the creature, and drew off from it and its dismal mewings, that they were still bound by a dread of what it might bring upon them. I must confess that I myself disliked the cat, though it seemed moved to wander up and down the deck and into the cabin, and to lament as it did more by some kind of distress than from spite. Maggie was the only one who took any notice of it; and she fed it and followed it about with an unwearied devotion to which the creature did not at all respond.

Next day, though the gale continued to abate, our plight was little improved. The Seamew carried herself heavily, though we could not discover she was making water. The wind was still northeast, against which she not only made no head, but kept losing way. I was therefore, not surprised when Jack came to me in the cabin, and said:

"There's something going on for'ard—no end o' talk and tobacco-juice."

We went on deck.

"Look at them," continued Jack, "there by the chains. See how they shove their shoulders into each other. When a sailor does that, and pulls his own ear as Dick Sandys is doing, there's something up. And they half look this way. Ah, here they come."

There were three of them, headed by Dick Sandys, shyly shouldering their way aft. Dick came pretty straight, pulling at his ear, with his eyes cast down, but with his round, ruddy face shining steadily forward; his comrades lurched about, looking from side to side, and touching things as they passed.

"Well, Dick," said I, "you want to speak to me, I suppose, you and your mates?"

"Ay, ay, sir; if you will kindly give us a word. Me and them, sir"—jerking his thumb over his shoulder—"comes as a deppytation from the fo'c'sle. We ain't got no notion o' dictation to the Captain, but we want to put ye in possession, sir, of what we're a thinking about. Eh, mates?"

Ay, ay."

"We see how its agoing to be. This here v'yage 'll never again get into no harbor; and some day, one o' them big steamers 'll come across her all a rottin, wi' not a sign o' life aboard but a cursed striped cat in the rigging. It's bound to live somehow—eh, mates? Well, sir, we ain't a-blamin' nobody. It's our luck, and the damed trick of that Lily. That's bound to be our luck wi' that there cat aboard; but it's not to be expected as how we'll take it meek and mild. Well, ye see, sir, they say, worse luck if ye throw her overboard. Jest so. But now this is what we were a-thinking; Suppose we set her adrift in an old tub."

This dark suggestion he conveyed in a low voice, with his hand to the side of his mouth, after a glance around to make sure the cat was not in hearing. Then he looked at me with a steady wistful eye; his mates fidgeted and looked over the ship's sides, as though they felt half ashamed of the plot to which they had given their adherence.

I considered a moment. I had, of course, no real belief that getting rid of the cat thus would give us a fair wind; yet still it was worth trying; it involved only the sacrifice of the cat, and if it did not change the wind, it would at least change the looks of my crew. But what would my little Maggie say? However, I turned at once to Dick.

"You can try it," said I. "I give you full leave—though, mark you, I don't believe in the nonsense. But get hold of it without my little girl seeing you."

"Ay, ay, sir."

Ah, it was a bad night. The wind whistled in ropes and cords, and spars and rigging creaked wearily. The broken water now and then came swash on our bulwarks, and twirling and hissing over us. Ah, my nearties, believe me, it's a better ashore than at sea! The cat was got and put into the tub, and over she went into the darkness and the rush and hiss of the mighty waters with a dreadful mew, that made our flesh creep.

I was glad that I did not see the men's faces. I felt—I don't know what. Then I went aft a step or two till I was close to the wheel and looking astern. I had stood maybe a minute or more, when, lo and behold! I saw just where the glimmer of the binnacle light fell on the bulwarks, the head and the staring eyes of that cat! I dashed forward just on the impulse. It was clambering on board again.

"Down, you brute!" I cried, pushing at it. God! how it clawed into the wood! "Down you wretch! you devil!"

It mewed terribly, held on with every claw, but—yes, yes! with furious, half-terrified hands—I tore it away and flung it out. I had not noticed that the men had come about me.

"Ah! and deliver us, sir!" said Dick, at my elbow. "You've done for us now! Lord knows what'll happen!"

In the feeble light I saw his and his companions' faces staring on me with a ghastly terror. I felt now like a fool and a criminal. Dick had barely done speaking, and I had just turned round, when a little white figure appeared. It was my little Maggie.

"Father," she whispered, "where are you? I heard my pussy mew, and I can't find her. Where is she? Have you seen my pussy, father?"

"Your father has thrown her into the sea, missy," said one of the men. "And what'll come o't, God knows."

How exasperated I was with that man "You'd better go for'ard, you men," was all I said, however. But, before any of us had time to stir, the crest of a wave, like a great white flying mane, flung itself over and drenched us. I caught Maggie in my arms all dripping, and carried her below. She said nothing, but looked at me in a way that cut me to the heart; her gaze was frightened and half turned away. I had no word to say for myself. I changed her nightgown and put her back in her berth. She shivered and snuggled down with her head under the bed clothes. After a little she peeped out and said to me:

"When you are some day angry with me, will you maybe throw me into the sea?"

I could not bear it. "Oh, Maggie, my child, my darling!" I cried, taking her in my arms; "don't talk and look like that. The cat was a bad cat, and brought us ill luck and bad weather."

"I thought," said Maggie, simply, "it was God made the weather." I was silent. After a pause she cried: "I want my pussy back, father. Get me it back. It was not bad, and I liked it."

"I wish, my dear," I said, "I could bring you it back."

Was it a meaw I heard, and a scratching, or was it only the wind above, and the dash of the water at the port-hole? Maggie had heard it, too, she sat up, and her eyes were fixed on the port-hole. With some difficulty I pulled it open, and in scrambled the cat!

I was never more delighted by the sight of any living thing than I was by the return of that poor, half-drowned cat. Such a weight of guilt was lifted off me! I felt almost like a little boy again, there, with my little girl beside me. The to-do that Maggie, and I made over the poor, outraged creature! I confess to you truly the tears came to my eyes. Maggie kissed it, all wet and shivering as it was, the brave little swimmer! I went to the cook and got some hot mess for it to eat, and prepared a snug little bed before the cabin stove, and poor grateful pussy licked my hand.

"Captain! Captain!" I heard eagerly whispered from the top of the cabin steps. I should have been on deck, and was turning to go—after a glance at Maggie, with a shawl about her sitting down by her recovered pussy—when the cook stumbled hurriedly down into the cabin, whispering in terror. "They've got at the spirits, Captain, and they're mad! They've knocked Dick down for standing up for you, and they're sure, as you threw the cat over-board, the only way to save the ship is to throw you after it! They're coming!"

And before another word could be said, or anything done, they were come. I suppose they at once suspected the cook of being informer; in a moment he was gagged and bound. I stood before them with what calmness I had; though I felt my cheek pale and my blood tingle to see all the desperate crew crowded in before me. They were not drunk; they were only primed to the Dutch courage point; their faces were blood-shot and resolute.

"What is the meaning of this, my men?" I asked firmly. "Mutiny?"

At the dreadful word they quailed a little, but Bill Bowser—he who had told Maggie I had drowned the cat, and who seemed the ringleader—made a step forward and said (he was an ugly slab of a man, with something like a squint, but he could speak to the point):

"No mutiny, Captain, only self-preservation, the first law of nature. That darned cat has been thrown overboard, and to save the ship and all the rest of us you must follow it, Captain, 'cause you done it."

I was about to speak, when Maggie, who looked very much surprised, but not in the least frightened, said, standing up in her sweet childish beauty, with the shawl slipping from her shoulders: "Look, pussy was in the sea, but she's come back again;" and she showed them the cat in her arms.

They were dumbfounded, and smitten with confusion. They stared at me, and at Maggie, and the cat, and they shouldered toward the stair. Bill Bowser again made himself spokesman.

"I'm blest," said he, "but that cat has the devil in her as sure as David. But look a-here, Captain, we must just set her adrift again, and tie her in this time."

"Now," said I, "I won't allow a hair of that cat to be touched again. And I advise all you men to clear out of this at once, or I shall take note of it and reckon it an attempt at mutiny." I spoke in a loud, commanding tone, to rouse Jack, who was in his berth close by.

"Oh, you will, will you?" said Bowser, now snarling out the rebellious spirit natural to him, and suggestively lowering his head and drawing up his sleeve from his right wrist. I felt sure he had his knife handy. "If it's to be reckoned mutiny, it may as well be made worth reckoning. Down with him mates?"

I caught the gleam of his knife; I had no weapon; I threw my cap in his face, and next instant floored him with my fist. At this juncture, as if in answer to little Maggie's cry, out ourst Jack, half-dressed, revolver in hand.

"Hallo! Eh? What's this?" he cried.

I took the revolver from his hand and pointed it among the men, who looked some sulky, some bewildered, but none inclined to follow Bowser's initiative.

"Now," said I, "I give you another chance. Be off at once to the fo'c'sle, or—." I clicked the trigger of the revolver.

"Ay, ay, Captain," they murmured, and tumbled up to the deck as fast as they could. "We didn't mean no harm, sir," pleaded those who were nearest me, and who were forced to linger.

No, the lubbers! no harm! But if Bill Bowser had struck me down with his knife, they would not have moved a finger or a tongue to save me, or to keep themselves from the crimes of mutiny and murder on the high seas. Yes; that's what your merchant seamen have come to, nowadays! As for Bill Bowser, he was, of course, put in irons.

Now, soon after daylight, with a nasty sea still running and the wind in the southeast, the man at the lookout sighted a bark with signals of distress flying. She was about two miles off our larboard quarter. By and by we sighalled what was the matter. "Leaking," was the answer; "all hands at the pumps." Then he set the ship's letters, and we made out the name—what do you think?—the Lily! Could it be the same Lily—the Lily, of Plymouth—as we had passed on our other quarter nearly a week ago? It might be; for, ye see, these hurricanes often, maybe always, work in a circle. Cyclone, d'ye say? Ay, yes; that's what we call them when met in the tropics. Well, we bore down on each other, and I took the opportunity of having a word or two with my men, to set myself right with them, and to make them, if I could, throw off that superstition about the cat. I called them aft.

"Now," said I, "you needn't look frightened; I'm not going to say anything about last night's affair. I agree to call it all a mistake, if you will give up your foolish, old wives notion about my cat here. I say my cat, because I am determined to take it home with me, and leave it with my little girl here. Now, look at it; hasn't it the nicest little face a cat ever had? How can you believe there is a devil in the creature?"

"The devil," said one, "often hangs out the prettiest figureheads, sir."

"Well," said I, "that's true. But now, you're sailors; you can't refuse shelter, and you can't surely think ill of a poor dumb creature that was twice thrown into the sea, and twice came back to the old ship, and that, after all, licked the hand that throw her out—ay, and—look ye!—licks it now."

"Hooray for the Captain!"

"But my hearties," said I, "there's another thing." And this was my stout point. "You see that bark out there? She's called the Lily, and I believe she's the same as smuggled this cat aboard of us. Now, has she gained anything by losing the cat? When she's been caught in the same hurricane as we have, and she's come worse out of it; she's driven far from her course, and she's leaking dangerously."

They turned out and looked at each other and nodded; they evidently thought there was something in it.

"We'll keep the cat, then," said I, "wether the Lily would like it back or no. Is that agreed?"

"Aye, aye, sir."

It was a bad sea, but we lowered a boat as we and the Lily approached; I particularly wanted to go aboard of her. I got the basket out in which pussy had come to us, replaced her as we had found her, and put the empty champagne bottles on top.

The crew of the Lily were dropping with fatigue when we went aboard, but, Lord! to see how the skipper and them about him woke up when they saw us. Astonishment is no word for it.

"Good God!" he exclaimed. "And you are the Seamew!"

"And you are the Lily!" said I. "That was a nice present you sent me. I have brought back the bottles and the basket;" and so saying, I uncovered pussy, who to my amazement, jumped out and bounded off. I had only intended to show the skipper she was there. The poor man stared, his jaw dropped, and he sank down on a coil of rope, with his head in his hands, uttering a long, hopeless groan.

"Come, my friend, cheer up," I said:

"We've almost nothing to eat," said he; "we've been at the pumps two days, and now that brute has come back! There's no use standing by them any more; our voyage comes to an end here, and down, down we go. We might as well have kept the beast; the old wretch's words have come true, and we finish in the middle, as she said."

I doubted his mind was wandering. "Come," said I, "bestir yourself and give orders. There's no use staying by the ship any longer; you must abandon her and come with me."

"What! leave the Lily? She's a good old ship, and she's my own; no, I'll go down with her and that cursed cat. Take off the crew, sir, however, and I'll thank you."

I could not make up my mind to think him deranged, and yet—. Just then the cat came bounding along the deck with something in her mouth, and all hands paused and stared. She put it in the basket at my feet, where she herself had lain, and again bounded away. It was a kitten! and alive! The skipper stared stupidly. Presently pussy returned with another.

"That's what's done it!" cried the skipper, with gathering fury: "after I got rid of her, they were here, and I never knew it!" He rose in his rage, and, siezing a crow-bar, would have smashed basket and all, but he was easily restrained and disarmed.

"Let me have them," said I; "my little girl will like them."

"What!" he cried, in something like an ecstacy of gladness. "And you will take the mother, too!" Then becoming again despondent, "but it is of no use now; I feel we are going down."

Pussy had returned with her third kitten, which was dead, and had begun to purr with delight, and to rub herself round my leg, when he roused himself and ordered all hands to take to the boats. We stood by them in our own boat (with pussy and her brood in the basket on the stern-seat), waiting to give them a line to our ship. When all the hands were in the boats there was a pause. Was not the skipper coming? No. "Cast off." The Lily was settling down rapidly, and the crew cast off with little concern. The skipper's last act was to launch with a curse a broken pulley-block at the basket in our stern, as we rode off. It just missed the boat, and slashed into the sea. The Lily went down before we reached the Seamew.

Next day we had a fair wind, and our crowded ship crowded all sail and went merrily racing, dipping and splashing for home. In our new, bright hopes of our voyage we all, I think, felt rather ashamed of our dreadful suspicions of pussy. At any rate, every one showed the utmost tenderness and solicitude for her and her two kittens.

How had the kittens been kept alive on the Lily all that week? you ask. I don't know; but I have heard of a rat playing the part of mother under similar circumstances, and I am certain there were rats in the Lily.

Woman's Triumph

The case of Mrs. Edward Myers, of Roundout, New York, furnishes an apt illustration of woman's power of endurance. This lady had been treated for months in the usual way for Erysipelas of the hand without benefit. Not until her hand had become a mass of putrified flesh did she turn to Dr. Kennedy proprietor of the "Favorite Remedy," for help.

He at once informed her that it was impossible to save the hand—it must be amputated. She received the terrible intelligence quietly, declined to take ether, stipulating merely to hold her husband's hand during the operation, and underwent the painful process without moving a muscle or uttering a groan. Dr. Kennedy then gave "Favorite Remedy" freely to cleanse the blood and prevent the return of the disease, and Mrs. Myers now lives and rejoices in her great deliverance.

"Favorite Remedy" is fast becoming a trusted household friend in all cases of Female Weakness and diseases of the blood. One dollar a bottle. Your druggist has it.

Choice Thoughts.

More decision is a virtue of the highest order.

Fortitude is the guard and support of other virtues.

Strive and encourage a mind and will of your own.

Never be persuaded contrary to your better judgment.

The heart is the only thing that is better by being broken.

Choose those companions who administer to your improvement.

It's easy finding reasons why other people should be good-natured.

Take life just as God gives it to you, and make it beautiful as you can.

The noblest deeds are often done where no eye but God's can see them.

Allowing the "blues" to master you is a sure way of cutting your life short.

The man who sits down on the road to success and waits for a free ride is sure to be left.

One of life's hardest lessons from the cradle to the grave is waiting. We send our ships out but cannot patiently await their return.

No persons, be they in ever so humble circumstances, but what have some quality of mind that entitles them to an equality with their fellow-beings.

A man who is unable to discover any errors or mistakes in the opinions he formerly held, is not likely to advance very fast in the requirement of knowledge.

To succeed in any of life's endeavors, be our talents what they may, we require perseverance, decision and tenacity of will to reach the full measure of success.

From the very hovels of poverty and destitution, we may, with self-reliance, wreathe about our heads laurels of undying fame and receive as a reward for our labors a crown of eternal life.

He understands liberty aright who makes his own depend upon that of others. True liberty does not permit the enfranchisement of one's self through the enslavement of some one else.

"Durn the dog!" he said, "I'll settle his hash for him when I go down there to see Kate to-night." And he proceeded to saturate the seat of his pants with strychine.

"Europe is treading on a volcano," reads old X. in his paper aloud. "Papa, what is a volcano?" asked the youngest. "Why, it is something to tread on my boy."

"One touch of nature," etc. Street preacher—"I now ask, brethren, what can I do to move you in this world of wickedness?" Array—"Send round the 'at, guv'nor. That'll move 'em."

"There's some things as old as the hills anyhow," said old Uncle Reuben. "What are they?" asked his niece. "They're the valleys between 'em, child," solemnly answered the old man.

The Elmira Advertiser says that 300 miles of red tape are yearly required to run the Washington departments. A few miles of the hemp might be introduced we believe, without much detriment to the service.—N. Y. Com. Advertiser.

The first complete translation of the Bible in the English language was printed in the year 1535. A perfect copy of it sold for $1,750, in 1838.

The Book of Common Prayer has been translated into more than sixty languages, and a million copies of it are printed every year.

James Franklin's old printing press, at which his brother Benjamin worked as an apprentice, is on exhibition at the Old South Church, Boston. It is now the property of the Massachusetts Charitable Mechanic Association, to which it was presented by Mr. John B. Murray, some years since.

Blackwood says of George Eliot's mode of composition: "She was the most careful and accurate among authors; her beautifully written manuscript, free from blur or erasure, and with every letter delicately and distinctly finished, was only the outward and visible sign of inward labor, which she had taken to work out her ideas. She never drew any of her facts or impressions from second hands, and thus, in spite of the number and variety of her illustrations, she had rarely much to correct in her proof sheets."

When a child begins to read it becomes delighted with a newspaper because it reads of names and things which are familiar, and it will progress accordingly. A newspaper, in one year, is worth a quarter's schooling to a child. Every father must consider that information is connected with advancement. The mother of a family, being one of its heads, and having a more immediate charge of children, should herself be instructed. A mind occupied becomes fortified against the ills of life, and is braced for any emergency. Children amused by reading or study are of course more considerate, and more easily managed.

A rapid penman can write thirty words in a minute. To do this he must draw his pen through the space of a rod, sixteen and a half feet. In forty minutes his pen travels a furlong. We make, on an average, sixteen curves or turns of the pen in writing each word. Writing thirty words in a minute, we must make 480 turns to each minute; in an hour, 28,000; in a day of only five hours, 144,000; in a year of 300 such days, 43,200,000. The man, therefore, who made 1,000,000 strokes with his pen was not at all remarkable. Many men—newspaper writers, for instance—make 4,000,000. Here we have, in the aggregate, a mark 300 miles long to be traced on paper by such a writer in a year.

A Traveler's Story.

After spending months at watering places and consulting the best physicians without benefit, I returned home disheartened and expected to die. A friend urged a trial of Parker's Ginger Tonic. Three bottles and careful diet have brought me excellent health and spirits, and I hope my experience may benefit similar sufferers.—Cincinnati lady. See other column.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

Since the introduction of Kellogg's Columbian Oil it has made more permanent cures and given better satisfaction on Kidney Complaints and Rheumatism than any known remedy. Its continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it known as a safe and reliable agent to employ against all aches and pains, which are the forerunners of more serious disorders. It acts speedily and surely, always relieving suffering and often saving life. The protection it affords by its timely use on rheumatism, Kidney affection, and all aches and pains, wounds, cramping pains, cholera morbus, diarrhoea, coughs, colds, catarrh, and disorders among children, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. It is absolutely certain in its remedial effects, and will always cure when cures are possible. Call at C. A. Wright & Co.'s and get a memorandum book giving more full details of the curative properties of this wonderful medicine.

Physiologically, soup has great value for those who hurry to and from their meals, as it allows an interval of comparitive rest to the fainting stomach before the more substantial beef and mutton is attacked, rest before solid food being as important as rest after it. Let a hungry and weary merchant or lawyer begin boldly with roast beef, and what is the result? The defeat is often as sudden as was the attack. When the body is weary, the stomach cannot stand the shock of an ill-masticated half pound of beef. But if a small plate of soup be taken, nourishment will soon be introduced, and strength to receive more substantial food will follow.

Going to His Grave.

There he goes again direct to a saloon and pours down another heavy draught of strong drink, not so much because his appetite demands it, but for the artificial buoyancy it produces the after effect of which leaves him more miserable than before; it is this dreadful practice that is daily sending thousands to their graves. A remedy for all this is found in the true friend of temperance,—the best and purest of all medicines,—Electric Bitters. Sold by all Druggists at 50 cents.

An ingenious farmer, sticking a few nails into a clothes line to keep his neighbor's cattle out of his pasture, went about his own business, thinking no more about the matter. A sharper came along, saw the rope, and began to think about it. He evolved the "barbed wire" fence, and the very farmer from whom the fellow got the idea had to pay the sharp a tribute for the article which he himself originally designed. And the income of the monopoly is estimated at $100,000 per month.

No, Sir!

A Scotch minister once said no woman could bear pain as well as a man. This is not so. The fact is generally the other way. Mrs. Edward Myers, of Rondout, N. Y., submitted to the operation of the removal of her hand by amputation, without ether, or moving a muscle, or uttering a groan. Dr. Kennedy, also of Rondout, N. Y., who performed the operation, said he never saw such heroism. The lady's disease was Erysipelas, and afterward the Doctor gave his "Favorite Remedy" to cleanse the blood. Mrs. Meyers is now well and strong.

"You do not mean to tell me that your husband is up and entirely cured by so simple a medicine as Parker's Ginger Tonic?" "Yes, indeed, I do," said Mrs. Benjamin to her neighbor, "and after we had lost eighty-five dollars in doctor's bills and prescriptions. Now my husband feels as well as ever.

THE WALTER A. WOOD HARVESTING MACHINES

Take the Lead.

In 1853, 500 Machines were sold.
In 1881, 40,413 were sold, and
47,000 have been ordered for 1882.

But the NE PLUS ULTRA of Harvesting Machinery is the Wood Twine Binder. This machine was first put upon the market in 1880, and 4,184 machines were sold that year. In 1881, the sales swelled to 10,034, and orders for over 12,000 have already been received for 1882.

THE WOOD TWINE BINDER!

Possesses these special points of excellence:

1—It is the most perfect automatic self binder ever made.
2—It effects a positive separation of the bound from the unbound grain.
3—The sheaf is formed and compressed without any strain on the twine until the knot is tied.
4—The grain is straightened by the action of the packer as it enters the binder.
5—The automatic uniform sizing of the bundle, thus relieving the driver of the care of stopping and starting the binder.

Last year's machines proved such a perfect success that they will be built substantially the same for 1882, with such improvements in minor details as may be found necessary.

Every farmer desiring to buy a self binder should examine the Wood Twine Binder before purchasing.

ENTERED AT THE POST OFFICE AT TECUMSEH, MICHIGAN, AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

TECUMSEH, MICH., MAY 25, 1882.

A NEW VOLUME.

On the 25th day of May, 1850, just thirty-two years ago this day, the first issue of the HERALD was put to press and sent out to its subscribers. The office was then located in the second story of a frame building which occupied the land now covered by the block in which the Peoples' Bank and Wright's drug store are. It consisted of a Washington hand press and about five hundred dollars worth of type and other material. The paper when started was a seven column folio printed entirely at home. It contained a few columns of home advertising, a good selection of foreign and domestic news, three or four heavy editorials and not to exceed one column of local home news. The first number of the HERALD when compared with the present number would present a singular contrast, not only in the size of the sheet, but also in the character of the printed matter they contain. We do not care to repeat the story of our trials and tribulations, and our ultimate success. What our patrons are most interested in now is the fact that we are still on deck with full sails set and a good breeze bearing us into port. The new tack taken last January of requiring payment in advance on all subscriptions has operated so nicely that we have no desire to return to the old slip-shop credit plan. People know what they have got; we know what to depend upon; no big subscription bills accumulate to astonish and harass subscribers; no papers are taken from us for which we cannot collect the pay. Unless the remaining months of 1882 belie the experience of the months already passed, we shall have no desire to return to the old plan.

A HINT TO THE UNEMPLOYED.

Although the country at large is in a prosperous state, although business of all kinds seems to be booming, although the demand for skilled labor in all departments of industry and science very largely exceeds the supply, the number of men, both old and young, who are out of employment, is said to be on the increase. Especially is this true in the cities and towns of the older states. Young men hurry through a school course, get a little smattering of the languages and a few common English branches, pick up a superficial knowledge of some profession or line of retail trade and then wait for something to turn up. Clerkships and easy berths of this character are filled to overflowing, while the useful trades are calling in vain for skilled labor.

More young men should become first-class machinists, millwrights, carpenters, farmers, builders, masons, inventors, and fewer turn their attention to trade, law and medicine. There is plenty of room on the top shelf in all of these occupations. Many a man has worried himself through a life of poverty, gleaning a scanty living in some of the overcrowded professions, who might have accumulated wealth and become an ornament to society in a flouring-mill, machine shop or cotton factory. Not that all young men should desert the professions. Those who are fitted for them by natural aptitude and acquired training should remain, but we assert that at least fifty per cent of the men who embark in law and medicine would make more money for themselves and be a greater credit to society in some other equally honorable occupation. In this practical age the man who acquires wealth and fame is the one who builds the reaping machine, runs the cotton spindle, digs the iron, gold and copper from the mines, plants the railroad, erects the telegraph, or runs a big wheat farm or sugar plantation.

MY AMATEUR FARM.

FIFTH WEEK.

*You cannot forget, if you would, those golden kisses all over the cheeks of the meadow, queerly called dandelions.—*HENRY WARD BEECHER.

When April steps aside for May,
Like diamonds, all the raindrops glisten;
Fresh violets open every day,
To some new bird each hour we listen.
—LUCY LARCOM.

"Now then," said Columbus, as he honed his razor on the stovepipe, and lathered his chin with a hairbrush, preparatory to shaving himself, just after breakfast on Sunday morning, "there's two things that's got to be did this week. In the first place we've got to have now an' then a mess o' greens on the table. 'Taint no use o' talkin,' a man can't do full work, unless he has a little green fodder occasionally. It tones up the system, and is as good a blood purifier as ginger tea, or sulpher, or Cuticura soap. There's no greens quite equal to dandylines. They're easy to raise, easy to pull, easy to dress and easy to bake. They grow in every respectable door yard, and I see you're raisin' 'em by the wholesale. Lettuce is pretty good, spinach is fair to middlin', early onions is good for dyspeptics, cabbage will answer in a dutch boardin' house, asparagrass will do for women and invalids and ministers, but for a real solid dish of greens as is greens, give me a mess of yaller dandylines. I've told my wife we must have a dish o' greens every day for dinner, and if she don't get 'em there'll be a row.

The next thing which must be did this week is to plant the early pertaters. The moon changes on Wednesday, and the pertaters must go into the ground on that day sure. I feel to hum in the pertater patch. I've planted hundreds of acres of pertaters over in Canada. I've planted pertaters as big as a quart measure and as little as quail's eggs. I've plowed 'em in, and hoed 'em in, and spaded 'em in, and shoveled 'em in, and covered 'em with straw, tan-bark and sawdust. I've planted 'em in hills and in drills, and broadcast. I've sowed bone meal under 'em, and plaster over 'em, and I never had pertaters that amounted to shucks, unless they was planted in the new of the moon. It don't make no difference whether the ground is plowed or harrowed or cultivated, if the pertaters goes into the ground at the right time of the moon, they're bound to grow, and if not, they're bound to rot. Some folks say I'm superstitious, that plantin' pertaters in the new of the moon is all moonshine, but what I've learned from experience I know. I put in three acres once by sewin' 'em broadcast, on a newly cleared field and coverin' 'em over with six inches of straw. The moon changed that identical day and I had an awful crop. I wore up six plow pints, plowin' 'em out, and busted ten pertater hooks goin' over the patch a second time to pick up the scatterin's. I dug pertaters in that patch which looked like a molasses jug with the handle knocked off, and which would fill an ord'nary coffee pot. I took samples of them pertaters to all the agricultural fairs in our section that fall, and won prize money enough to buy my wife a hull set of brass jewelry, a satchel full of dime novels for the family library, and a pair of barber pole stockings for the baby." At this point Columbus stopped to take breath and give his chin a second coat of lather. I cheerfully assented to his program, and slid out to dress for Sunday school. The next day I bought three barrels of magnum bonum potatoes at ten dollars a barrel, and made the necessary arrangements to plant them on Wednesday. How they were planted is set forth in my diary.

Monday, May 2d.—Columbus went to mill in the morning and got four bags of feed for the cows—oats and corn ground together with the cob on. He then got his plows and drags ready to work the potato ground. Jones burned last year's crop of burdocks off the potato patch.

Tuesday, May 3d.—Columbus plowed the potato ground, marked out the rows, and filled the trenches with good rotted compost. Jones watered the asparagus bed with pork brine and cut potatoes for planting.

Wednesday, May 4th.—The moon changed at six o'clock this morning. Had an early breakfast. Ichabod and Jones sharpened their jack-knives and went to cutting potatoes. Hired Charley Brent and Homer Gilman to help and had them drop potatoes in the trenches. My arrangements were perfect and the work spun along like a top until ten o'clock. Ichabod's pet lamb, the Captain, had been very officious all the morning and in trying to jump from the kitchen door step over Jones' head, he alighted in Jones' lap. The jack-knife slipped and took the ball of Jones' left thumb clean off. Ichabod had to hitch up and go to town for some court plaster and Jones cut potatoes with one hand the rest of the forenoon. The hired help all took dinner with Columbus. In addition to the usual bill of fare they made way with a square peck measure full of dandelion greens. At two o'clock the potatoes were cut and Ichabod and Jones shouldered their hoes and marched to the patch to "cover them over." To their dismay they found that the boys, instead of dropping the cut tubers in the trenches, had carefully laid them on the surface half way between the rows. Columbus swore and tore his hair. He gave Homer a booting and dressed down Charley with a clapboard. This exertion, together with the greens for dinner, brought on an attack of colic. Jones and the boys rolled him into a three-cornered hencoop, loaded it on the wheelbarrow and took him to the house. He was fearfully sick. His wife gave him a pitcher of catnip tea, the two boys held a hot flatiron to each foot, Jones bathed his spine in vinegar and rubbed the back of his head with a warm brick, and the kitchen girl ran for the doctor. When I went home to supper, the house resembled a hospital. The doctor had just arrived and assumed command. I paid off Jones and the boys, and postponed the potato planting till the next change of the moon.

Thursday, May 5th.—Columbus tended the kitchen fire and dieted on beef tea.

Friday, May 6th.—Columbus put a leg in the wheelbarrow and made it Paris Green sifter with which to doctor potato bugs.

Saturday, May 7th. — Columbus picked up the seed potatoes and stored them in pickle barrels to await the arrival of the next new moon.

When April steps aside for May

Director Jauner, of the burned Ring theatre in Vienna, was convicted of tributary negligence, and sentenced to four months' simple arrest while, Herr Nitzche and Herr Geringer will be given eight and four months' imprisonment, respectively, fasting one day each month.

The steamer Altenower lies in quarantine at San Francisco, loaded with Chinamen afflicted with small-pox. A barge containing a large party en route for the pest-house was swamped, and one coolie was lost. A squad of police has been sent to the ship to aid in keeping order.

A reunion of the Beaubien family was held in Chicago Wednesday evening, at which conversation was carried on in English, French, and Pottawatomie. Seven children of General Jean B. Beaubien were present and two sons of Mark, the ancient fiddler. John Wentworth was on hand to meet old friends.

Miss Anne Whitney, of Boston, has completed a plaster cast for a statue of Harriet Martineau, and it will soon be shipped to Florence for reproduction in marble. The work will cost over $12,000, and the necessary funds have been subscribed by the ladies of Boston.

Hillsdale Standard: In referring to the prospect of the Adrian straw goods manufactory removing from Adrian to Hillsdale, an Adrian paper for want of sensible argument to discourage the proprietors from removing their establishment, says, "Hillsdale is a very dead place at present." We admit Adrian has some advantages over Hillsdale for notoriety—Hillsdale was never advertised by a 'kid' mayor—Hillsdale was never advertised by floating its water bonds on the New York market—Hillsdale never advertised $1,000 reward for the arrest of its highest official. If Adrian is not dead its the wonder of the age, with the burthen of afflictions it has had to bear for the past six months, that it has not committed suicide.

THE Lansing Republican in speaking about the fruit prospects, says: The frost of the night of May 15, is believed to have taken what fruit was left by the frosts of week before last. In some portions of the state the young peaches are reported falling from the trees. In Southwestern Michigan early strawberries are reported killed and the general crop reduced one-half. Pears are also killed and all fruit except apples badly injured.

REV. R. S. PARDINGTON will deliver a discourse on Sabbath evening in memory of "Our fallen soldiers in the late war." This service will, in a measure, take the place of public services on May 30th.

Hudson Post: A temporary injunction against paving West Main street was granted by Judge Howell to-day (Saturday) against the Common Council and Hubbard Smith. The hearing is set for June 7th, when the real tug of war begins, and when it will be decided whether a permanent injunction will be served or not; the present proceedings being preliminary. Van-Akin, contractor for excavating and filling, is not interfered with.

C. D. BILLS returned last Monday from Dayton, Ohio. He had his new mare there, and also Green Charlie. The former did as good trotting as he expected. The race in which Green Charley was entered did not come off. Last Monday he started the horse for Howell, where he is entered in the 2:27 race on Wednesday, and in the "free for all" race on Friday. We shall expect to hear a good report from Green Charley this week.

AN American building and savings association has been organized in Jackson with a capital of $187,500, divided into 1,500 shares. The object of the corporation is to make loans to members to enable them to secure for themselves homes and places of business. Loans are secured by first mortgage on real estate. Every shareholder is bound to pay on each loan of $125 he receives, an interest of fifteen cents per week, from and after the same shall be awarded to him, until the dissolution of the association.

Card.

Will you kindly allow the family of the late Mrs. Mosher space in your valuable paper to express their thanks to their neighbors and friends for their kind sympathy and friendship in their late bereavement.

S. MOSHER.

A Card.

We desire in this way to return our thanks to numerous friends of Macon and Ridgeway, for their kindly greetings and almost surprise on the afternoon of Tuesday last. After a most pleasant and an enjoyable time socially, they administered to us by the hand of Dr. George A. Howell a prescription of about fifty dollars in ready money. Whatever may be said of the Doctor's other prescriptions, this at least was certainly not bad to take. We have never been among kinder or more generous friends than the people of Macon and Ridgeway. This has rendered our stay among them peculiarly pleasant and serves to deepen proportionally our pain and regret at leaving them. May Heaven bless them and reward them abundantly for their kindness to us, is the prayer of

REV. J. H. KERSHOW.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL.

EVERY one is preparing for circus day next Saturday.

A NEW time card will go into effect on the Wabash line next Monday.

JOHN R. CLARK will deliver a temperance lecture in Macon village, on Sunday evening, June 4th.

MR. & MRS. C. J. WEIR, of Jackson, Mich., have been making their Tecumseh friends a short visit.

THE members of the committee of the Farmers' Club are requested to meet at the HERALD office, Saturday, June 3d, at three o'clock P. M.

JAS. MCADAM, who was for many years a clerk in John Smith's store in Clinton, has entered the employ of A. B. Cotton of this village.

BAKER & HALL have started their soda water fountain. With Mr. Baker's skill in preparing syrups they are sure of plenty of custom on warm days.

A CAMBRIDGE farmer named Jeptha Fleming committed suicide last week by hanging. He was in good circumstances and the cause of the act is a mystery.

W. H. GORMAN, the most daring hurdle rider that now rides, will appear in his masterly acts of horsemanship in Tecumseh on Saturday, May 27, with Maybury, Pullman & Hamilton's show.

MABLEY, the Detroit Clothier, has organized a band of twenty instruments among his employees, and Cub Berdan furnished the entire outfit against all competitors. A pretty good card for Berdan.

QUITE a delegation of Adrian men visited Tecumseh last Thursday. H. S. Russell, Dan Ketcham, T. S. Applegate, and "Doc" Smith were all here together and Sheriff Bidwell came with them. It was a beautiful day for a drive, so they took the overland route.

MR. JACOB WILSON, of Seneca Co., N. Y., an uncle of Robert Cairns, accompanied by his wife, arrived in town last week and expects to remain several weeks among their family relatives in this vicinity. Mr. Wilson visited Tecumseh over forty years ago and he says that the changes during that period have been astonishing.

MR. E. P. BUCKLEY has opened his new Livery on Ottawa street, just south of Kennedy & Co's. establishment, and is now prepared to let rigs to all who need them. He has brand new carriages and harness just from the shop, and a good lot of horses. He has also a feed barn attached where farmers can put out their team. Geo. Powell has charge of the barn.

JOHN R. CLARK will spend all the Sundays in July in holding meetings at the Park or Theatre Comique in Detroit. He will assist in establishing a Street Boys' Mission there.—Meetings will be conducted by him in their interest every Sunday afternoon and in the evening meetings for the masses. The singing will be conducted by a Jubilee Quartette engaged expressly for these meetings. Mr. Clark has a strong hold upon the young Arabs and street gamins of Detroit.

An exchange thus fitly describes the meaning of the term local enterprise. If you think of anything that can be done to beautify and build up your town, go and do it; keep your capital at home; patronize home industries; help your merchants to sell more so they can sell cheaper; always get your work done in your own town if possible; subscribe and pay for the home paper, don't steal or borrow the reading of it. If people would operate more in accordance with these suggestions there would be less complaining because the town doesn't boom.

JAS. B. COLVIN, of Raisin, is still making improvements upon his home farm. On Saturday last he raised the frame for a splendid horse barn, a few rods in the rear of his family residence. The building is placed on a stone foundation, is to be 30x40 feet in size, with 18 feet posts. It will accommodate six horses and have the necessary rooms for carriages, harnesses, feed bins, etc. Water will be conveyed into the barn from a large tank fed by the wind mill at the house, and in short he will have all the conveniences which ingenuity can devise for a building of this kind. Alma West, a veteran barn builder, has charge of the work. About six o'clock P. M., when the frame was up, the attendants were invited to a splendid supper which was spread on a lengthy table on the lawn east of the house, to which they did ample justice. Not the least accident occurred, and Mr. Colvin no doubt feels himself under obligations to his neighbors for their generous assistance. Mr. Colvin intends to have the best horse barn in the town of Raisin when it is finished.

J. H. TRIBOU was home over Sunday.

THE Pioneers of Jackson County will meet at Grass Lake on June 1st.

MRS. ED. LAUER, of Monroe, is the guest of the Misses Smith of this village.

PRAYER meeting on Friday eve. at Mr. Samuel Haight's, in Brownville, at 7:45.

SUTTON & SWAN have a new card this week setting forth the merits of the Red Jacket force pump. Read it.

ALBERT HYDE and wife and Miss Franc Hyde start to-day for a months' trip through western and central New York.

AMONG the nominations sent in by the President last Monday was the name of Fred Rosacrans as postmaster at Tecumseh.

MORGAN MILLER arrived in town last Friday, all the way from California. He is stopping at present with his brother Nelson Miller in Macon.

A. W. SLAYTON has just completed a book case for G. P. Waring, Ridgeway, which is one of the handsomest pieces of furniture ever manufactured in Tecumseh.

BISHOP BORGESS held confirmation services at St. Joseph's Catholic Church in Adrian, last Sunday. Over fifty children received the rite and the spacious church was crowded.

A SLIGHT mistake was made in setting up A. W. Slayton's advertisement last week. 30,000 should have read 3000. The blunder was nothing however, as it was simply a zero too much.

Clinton News: The Reform Club have purchased the scenery formerly belonging to Merchants' Hall, Tecumseh, for $20. The scenery is in good condition and is well worth the price paid.

MISS M. C. DINGMAN will remove her millinery stock next Monday, May 29th, to the store formerly occupied by H. S. Lee as a shoe store, first door west of Gainsley & Co's dry goods store.

L. F. WHEELER returned from Philadephia last Tuesday night. While in that city he purchased a pair of the finest dissolving view lanterns in the market, with a large and fine assortment of views and a complete calcium light outfit.

LOOK out for one of the finest circus companies that ever visited this place, on Saturday, May 27. In addition to the large and excellent equestrienne company there will be exhibited a large and rare collection of wild animals.

THE Blissfield Advance has commenced a new volume. The Advance is true to its name, and is always found in the van among the local newspapers in this part of the state.—May it live long and prosper abundantly.

The Detroit Evening News: Willoughby K. Lay, the "prophet," whose "goings on" have made such a sensation at Sandwich, Ill., says he is "a graduate of the Adrian, Mich., protestant methodist church." This is pretty tough on that excellent society.

MR. E. GRAY will exhibit a wonderful clock at the opera house next Saturday. Our national beginning and present existence are faithfully portrayed by working figures representing war and peace, soldiers going to the front in 1776 and 1861. Mechanics at work building war and peace implements. Talking figures giving explanations of the mechanisms and times, &c., too numerous to mention. Admission only ten and fifteen cents.

THE funeral of Judge Beakes at Ann Arbor, May 20, was largely attended. The pall bearers were ex-Gov. Felch, E. W. Morgan, President Angell, Judge Cooley, C. H. Richmond, E. B. Pond, E. D. Kinney, R. E. Frazer, Prof. DuPont, T. E. Hill. The members of the Washtenaw county bar attended the funeral in a body. Don M. Dickinson, Wm. P. Wells and Sullivan M. Cutcheon of Detroit, and ex-Gov. Blair of Jackson were also present.

WE took a ride through East Ridgeway a few days since, and among our observations noticed decided improvements in the Christian parsonage and its grounds. We understand that the pastor, Mr. Sink, is quite popular among his people, and is regarded as an excellent exponent of christian principles, as well as being an eloquent speaker and reasoner. He is favored regularly with good sized audiences and commands close attention.

IN memory of our fallen comrades Rev. R. S. Pardington will on Sabbath evening deliver a sermon on our "Dead Heroes," and in honor of the above all the old soldiers of the late war are respectedly invited to meet at the residence of Mr. Jehiel Davidson at 7 o'clock sharp, and march to the M. E. church, where seats will be reserved for the accommodation of all who may desire to attend.

BY ORDER OF COM.

MERCHANTS, keep your back doors fastened next Saturday.

THE second edition of "Michigan and Its Resources" has been issued. It contains several pages of matter additional to those which appeared in the first issue, and very considerably later statistics. Copies of the pamphlet will be sent to persons seeking new homes when names and addresses are furnished. Address Frederick Morley, Commissioner of Immigration, Detroit.

Morenci Observer: We notice by the Kansas papers that Lucian Baker, a former Morenci boy, is the coming man for congress from that young and vigorous state. He heads the list of probable candidates and his nomination and election are regarded as sure by his host of enthusiastic admirers. His friends here echo the wish of his Kansas supporters that he may have a long and brilliant career in the councils of the nation.

WITH Maybury, Pullman & Hamilton's great show will be seen one of the largest elephants in America. Though not so exaggerated as some others now on exhibition, this huge elephant has a proud record, and is one of the most noted of its race. The monster is said to be 103 years old and has assumed an active part in several bloody battles while under the control of the King of Siam, and has killed, since his advent in this country some five or six men at various times.

A $20.00 Biblical Reward.

We will give $20 in gold to the person telling us which is the middle verse in the bible by June 10th, 1882. Should two or more correct answers be received the reward will be divided. The money will be forwarded to the winner June 15th, 1882. Persons trying for the reward must send 20 cts in silver (no postage stamps taken) with their answer, for which they will receive the July Monthly, in which the name and address of the winner of the reward and the correct answer will be published. This may be worth $20 to you; cut it out. Address, Rutledge Publishing Co., Easton, Penna.

A FAIR ASSOCIATION.

Our reporter snatched a short interview last Monday with Mr. C. D. Bills in regard to the project of organizing a Fair Association here and securing the use of his race track. Mr. Bills is ready to do his full proportion in a movement of that kind. He has a fine lot containing about fifteen acres of land, and a good track thereon. If a responsible company will fence and erect buildings on the lot he will give them the use of the land a few seasons, rent free, or he will fence the land himself and build a grand stand, warranted not to tumble down, if the company will allow him a fair yearly rental for the property.—He is willing to adopt most any plan that may be acceptable to those interested. Now seems to be the favorable opportunity to start this movement.—We presume there are one hundred farmers within a circuit of ten miles of Tecumseh who would gladly take stock in a company of this character, and with the help which Mr. Bills would extend to the enterprise a good strong association could be planted at a very moderate expense. We should like to hear from some of our farmers on this subject.

The Usual Result.

We thought we had a good machine in our household until one day the agent of the New Home presented himself at our door and proceeded to deliver an oration upon its characteristic merits. "But," we answered, "our machine serves us nicely and suits us well, and we do not care for another." The agent, however begged the privilege of leaving one of his machines with us "for the ladies to try." The request was not unreasonable, so we granted it—but more to oblige the agent than anything else; for we really did not want the machine, and had not the remotest idea of buying it.

The machine once in the house, it was natural that the ladies should look it over. They did so, and as a consequence fell in love with it. They say that without the slightest wish to decry or disparage any other machine, this, all things considered, is in their opinion, the most desirable one to be had. The upshot of the whole matter was that the old machine was disposed of, and the "Light Running New Home" installed in our household. It is pronounced a genuine beauty and a real comfort, and "our folks" wanted us to tell other folks about it.

This unrivalled machine is manufactured by the New Home Sewing Machine Co., 30 Union Square, New York, who wish us to say that all who will send for their new illustrated catalogue and enclose their advertisement (printed on another page,) will receive a set of fancy advertising novelties, of value to those collecting cards, &c.

COUNTY CLIPPINGS.

Blissfield is making the necessary arrangements to properly observe Decoration day.

E. R. Smith and Charles Brooks have been appointed as the associate members of the Board of Review in Clinton.

David Woodward, of Clinton, examined his large orchard last week, and pronounces the fruit buds in good condition.

Palmyra will soon have a taste of that modern invention—a dam law suit. Jared Bailey has brought suit against Michael Wiegle for building a dam on the line between the two farms and thus converting Bailey's land into a pond.

Hudson Gazette: The 15,000 tiny eels deposited in Bean Creek in 1882, by Messrs. Ed. Ames and Jo. Welch have developed into very fine and desirable fish, much sought after by the Hudson sportsman, and they are capturing a goodly number of them, too.

Hudson Post: A. Loyster & Son churned 350 pounds of butter on Tuesday, probably the largest "batch" of butter ever churned in Lenawee Co., or even in the state of Michigan. But this is only a beginning, ere long you will hear of his churning a thousand pounds in one day.

Hillsdale is bidding for the Adrian straw goods factory and unless a bonus of $3,000 shall be raised at once the chances are favorable that Hillsdale will walk away with the institution. Outside of the car works it is one of the most flourishing manufacturing enterprizes of Adrian.

Adrian Press: J. L. O'Mealy, who studied in the office of Millard & Bean has removed from Hudson to this city, and will be in the employ of C. A. Stacy, as legal assistant. Mr. O'Mealy is a genial wide awake gentlemanly young man and we are glad to welcome him to our city as a resident.

Adrian Press: Dogs went at the sheep of Alex. McCabe, of Seneca, one day last week, and killed eleven and wounded six others so they will probably die. Justice Killin, of Morenci, will estimate the damage done by the killin' of the sheep. The worthless curs that did the business should be hunted down, if a reward had to be offered therefor.

Morenci Observer: A work train came over the Fayette branch last Monday and distributed about 500 cedar ties to the section, designed, as we learn, to displace all the old and rotten ties on the track. This, with the extensive bridge building recently done, looks as if the road had come to stay and will not be torn up, as some have vaguely imagined.

Morenci Observer: The directors of the U. E. & D. P. association have succeeded in selling about one hundred and twenty-five additional shares of the stock, thus greatly strengthening their means and influence. A vacancy has occurred in the office of president, and the next important thing to be done is the appointment of a suitable person for the position.

Morenci Observer: The holders of the paper of the defunct national bank at Buffalo are now hopeful that they may get their money, as a recent decision of the courts would seem to indicate that the stockholders of the bank are holden for the liabilities. It is said that over $50,000 of the paper of the fraudulent concern is now held by the Hillsdale and Lenawee county stock dealers.

Blissfield Advance: The sad intelligence was received here Monday noon of the accidental drowing at Pullman, where they were employed, of Charles F. Pierce and Henry T. Moore, both of this village. Mr. Pierce has been employed there about two years, but Mr. Moore had gone there but a few weeks ago. The blow falls with crushing effect on both the families of the deceased, being dependent on them for their daily bread.

Deerfield Record: The examination of Rev. Edwin Dawe began before Justice Greenly, at Adrian, on Friday last and continued through Saturday, when it was postponed until Monday next, the 22d, by request of the prosecution, who desired to secure the attendance of an important witness from a distance. Several witnesses from this village, were examined, but a raft more of them in attendance from here and Petersburg, were not put on the witness stand.

Blissfield Advance: Fitts Bros., proprietors of the mop factory, have so far completed arrangements (as to be able to commence operations, and this week turn out their first order.—The mop is one which will sell at a glance, its superiority over all others being at once apparent. Machinery and appliances have been put in position whereby several thousand mops can be turned out in a very short time. Orders for over 2,000 have already been received and the boys expect to have their hands full when active operations shall have been commenced. Of their fruit evaporator we shall speak at another time.

Beneficial Wild Birds.

At a meeting of the Ontario agricultural commission held at London, Mr. William E. Sanders, the well-known Canadian ornithologist gave an account of some insectivorous birds that were worthy of encouragement. He said he had been engaged in the study of birds for the last seven or eight years, and had examined the crops of probably about two hundred; of the birds which were purely insectivorous, the most common was the largest family of warblers, of which the yellow warbler and the redstart mostly took their food on the wing, but partially on the branches of trees; of the birds which took their food exclusively on the wing there were the fly-catchers, which included the king bird and the pee-wee; their food was chiefly flies. Moths were numerously caught by nighthawks, and these altogether with the swallows he considered birds beneficial to the farmer and fruit-grower. Of the birds which fed partly on the wing and partly on trees, the food of the yellow warbler consisted chiefly of the larvæ and eggs of moths, which they took from the leaves of trees; the vireds and cuckoos were birds of the same class, and similarly beneficial. The bluebird fed mostly on insects, though it might take grain when its favorite diet was not obtainable. The insects devoured by the last described class of birds were mostly injurous to the orchardist and the farmer. The nuthatch, which was a very common bird, stayed in these latitudes the year round, and lived almost entirely on insects and their eggs, and chrysalides. The woodpeckers mostly took their food upon trees. The redheaded variety were generally considered a pest on account of their devouring so much fruit, chiefly cherries and apples. The high-hole woodpecker, though it occasionally ate a few cherries, was on the whole a bird which should be protected, owing to the number of insects it devoured. The hairy and downy woodpeckers and the yellow-bellied variety were commonly, but he believed injustly, denominated sapsuckers, and accused of destroying fruit and other trees by extracting the sap from them. He had never seen trees injured by them, and they were beneficial birds in his estimation.

Of the birds which ate their food upon the ground there were first the thrushes, including the robin, the tawny thrush, the brown thrush, and the cat bird. From his examination of the maws of the robin he had very little to say in his favor, as they were very destructive to cherries and other fruits, and ate very few insects—chiefly coleoptera—and then only when it could not get fruit; the cat bird was allied to the robin, and like it was destructive to raspberries; the tawny and the brown thrushes were almost exclusively insectivorous. The food of the blackbird family—which included the red-winged blackbird, the crow blackbird, the cow bird, the meadow lark, and the oriole—consisted largely of beetles and larvæ; the crow blackbird, however, lived almost entirely on grain; while the cow bird, like the European cuckoo, was decidedly injurous by laying its eggs in the nests of other and beneficial birds, whose young were generally starved to death owing to the greater size and more clamorous appetite of the intruding brood; the red-winged blackbird fed on the larvæ of beetles in the spring, but in the fall it devoured grain.

About 25 per cent. of the food of the meadow lark consisted of beetles and other insects, the remainder being vegetable food, but of what kind he had been unable to ascertain. The Bathurne oriole was beneficial to the farmer. The sparrows were all pretty much grain feeders, though the grey bird, or chipping sparrow fed largely on insects. One variety, the purple finch, devoured the buds of trees, and was injurous on that account. The indigo bird fed mostly on the seeds of grasses and weeds. The English sparrow seemed to feed about equally on seeds and insects, but he had not examined their stomachs.

The Earth's Surface.

The changes in level of the earth's surface, which must have been rapid and vast in early geological ages, are yet in progress. Aside from paroxysmal changes, such as the volcanic upheaval of an island now and then, great area of land in different parts of the globe are undergoing a slow process of elevation or subsidence. In Greenland a subsidence is taking place. For six hundred miles from Disco Bay to the Frith of Igaliko, the coast has been sinking for four centuries past. Old buildings and islands have been submerged, and the Moravian settlers have had to put down new poles for their boats, the old ones standing, Lyell observes, "as silent witnesses of the change." On the North American coast south of Greenland, from Labrador to New Jersey it is supposed that similiar changes are going on. G. H. Cook concludes that a slow subsidence is in progress along the coast of New Jersey, Long Island and Martha's Vineyard, and according to A. Gesner, the land is rising in St. John in New Brunswick; sinking at the island of Grand Menan; rising on the coast opposite, at Bathurst; sinking about the Bay of Fundy, where there are regions of stumps submerged thirty-five feet at high tide; and rising at Prince-Edward's Island. It is believed that, in the Pacific Ocean, the region of the Coral Islands has, in some portions, sunk not less than six thousand feet during comparatively recent geological times. Surveys made in northern Sweden have shown, according to Lyell, that the coast is rising at the rate of about four feet in a century.

Jones once rushed into the squire's office in a great passion, and said: "That scoundrel of a cobbler, Smith, has sued me for five dollars for a pair of boots." "Then you owe him five dollars?" "To be sure I do, but he's gone and sued—sued me!" "Then why don't you pay him, if you owe him?" "Because he sued me; when a man does that I'll never pay him until it costs him more than he gets. I want you to make it cost him all you can." But it will cost you something too." "I don't care for that. What do you charge to begin with?" "Ten dollars, and more if there's much extra trouble." "All right! There's the X. Now go ahead." No sooner was the client gone than Squire Johnson stepped across to his neighbor, Smith, and offered to pay the bill on condition that the suit was withdrawn. The shoemaker gladly accepted—all he wanted was his pay. The lawyer retained the other five dollars as his fee, and as the case was not troublesome he made no demand upon his client. Ten days after Jones came in to see how his case was getting on. "All right!" said the lawyer; you won't have any trouble about that. I put it to Smith so strongly, that he was glad to withdraw the suit altogether." "Capital!" cried the exulting Jones. "You have done it brown! You shall have all my business hereafter.

An American consular officer relates a very funny occurrence, which came under his observation during his official residence in Liverpool. A wealthy ship-owner, who was better at making money than at spelling, sent an order to Bombay, and among other things wrote for two monkeys, which he wanted to present to friends; but departing from the usual mode of spelling the word two, he put it too. Perhaps the handwriting was not very legible, as is often the case with other than illiterate ship-owners. At any rate, the master of the ship read it 100 instead of too, and so did the agents at Bombay. There was much astonishment at so strange an order, but the master was bound to obey instructions. Accordingly the service of a number of natives were secured, the country round about was scoured, and in a few days a hundred monkeys, of all colors and previous conditions, were secured. There were little black monkeys, with eyes like beads, bigger monkeys with whiskers, and baboons whose grave expression of countenance presented a ridiculous contrast to their undignified antics. The whole crowd chattered, screamed, and fought in the cage which had been provided for them in the ship, in spite of all efforts to keep them quiet. In a few days the homeward voyage was begun, and with it the troubles of the crew.

As soon as the motion of the ship was felt, the monkeys redoubled their noise, making a regular pandemonium of the ship. Relays of them shook the bars of the cage without a moment's cessation for twenty-three hours out of each twenty-four, until the cage was literally shaken to pieces, and the astonished sailors beheld a cloud of monkeys issuing from the hold, scrambling, fighting, and tumbling over each other as if their lives depended upon getting into the rigging in the shortest possible time. The monkeys, with mischievousness unparalleled, would steal every thing they could lay their hands on. If clothes were hung up to dry they would carry them up to the highest point attainable and pick them to pieces. It was necessary to set a guard over every thing that was washed or dried. When the cabin boy swept the deck he had to lock up the broom, for if he hid it ever so securely, his back would scarcely be turned before an old ape, half as big as a man, would have it, going through the motion of sweeping the deck with an air of indescribable gravity. So great was the annoyance that it was with great difficulty that the officers could keep the men from shooting their tormentors, and when the ship touched at Aden half of the crew deserted, prefering to take their chances at this inhospitable place than to endure further persecution.

Finally the ship reached home. She had been signaled at Land's End, and the owner was at the dock when she arrived. Ship-owners generally pride themselves on the trim appearance of their ships, and our friend was weak in this respect, if in no other. What then was his astonishment to see the ship's rigging crowded with knots or bunches, with here and there a festoon where several monkeys had suspended themselves from a spar in a string, holding each other by the tail! Everybody about the docks viewed with wonder the approaching spectacle. The ship moved slowly to her berth, and presently her yard arms neared those of several other vessels lying at dock. In an instant the monkeys leaped from one to the other, and began a tour among the forests of masts that fringed the harbor of Liverpool. All the boys and idlers around the dock were engaged, and a grand hunt ensued, up and down the rigging from ship to ship, until all were captured.

The owner was furious, but was, after a while, mollified by an explanation, and the difficulty satisfactorally adjusted. The monkeys were gradually sold off, realizing a profit of about fifty dollars above what they had cost.

Laugh More.

Mothers do not laugh enough. The housekeeping is so onerous, the children so often trying to nerves and temper, the servants most exasperating and even John, kind good husband that he is, cannot understand all our vexations and discouragements, and so wearied do we often feel that it is too much for the household to depend on us, in addition to all our cares, for social sunshine as well. Yet the household does, and it must. Father may be bright and cheery, his laugh ring out, but if the mother's laugh fails, even the father's cheerfulness seems to lose much of its infection. In the sad but forcible lines of one of Joanna Baillie's dramas—

Her little child had caught the trick of grief,
And sighed amid its playthings—

we may catch a glimpse of the stern repressed life at Bothwell Manse, where "the repression of all emotions, even the gentlest, seems to have been the constant lesson." I remember well hearing a lady say, "When a child, I used to wish so often that my mother would look cheerful."

Then laugh, mother, even if you do feel almost too weary to exert the facial muscles, and you have to make a pitiful effort which comes nigh bringing tears instead of a laugh. You will feel better for the effort, and so will the children. The little ones, unconsciously to you and themselves, are catching the very phases of countenance which will go far to brighten or cloud some future home.

Then laugh, mother—parlor, nursery, and kitchen all feel the effect of your smile or frown. The cheery laugh of a mother goes down through generations, as well as her frown. And when the mother's eyes are closed, and lips and hands forever still, there is no sweeter epitaph which children and friends can give than, "She was always bright and cheerful."

WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY & LIVER CURE

Disease is an effect, not a cause. Its origin is within its manifestations without. Hence, to cure the disease the cause must be removed, and in no other way can a cure ever be effected. WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY AND LIVER CURE is established on just this principal. It realizes that of all diseases arise from deranged kidneys and liver, and it strikes at once at the root of the difficulty. The elements of which it is composed act directly upon these great organs, both as a food and a restorer, and by placing them in a healthy condition, drive disease and pain from the system.

95 Per Cent.

For the innumerable troubles caused by unhealthy Kidneys, Liver and Urinary Organs; for the distressing Disorders of Women; for Malaria, and for physical derangements generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

A SPRING DEFENSE.

How to Repel the Assaults of Ill Health—Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY Means Something for You.

The months of March, April and May are the three successive arches of a bridge which connect the season of ice and sleet with that of leaves and roses. No less in respect of health than of outward natural phenomena is this true. Spring is a trying season for invalids, and particularly for those who either suffer, or are liable to suffer from Biliousness, Kidney complaint and Constipation of the Bowels, and for women who are chronically subject to any of the long catalogue of physical ailments to which their delicate sex is heir. Indications of disease in spring should be heeded at once. A fatal attack may easily result from neglect or a disordered condition of the bowels. The ounce of prevention may be had where tons of cure or attempted cure may be unavailing. Are you vexed or troubled in spring with indigestion, torpid or disordered liver, want of appetite, constipation, or a feverish state of the skin? If so, take without an hour's unnecessary delay Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. No medicine is so harmless and yet so quick and positive in its action. It is Nature's own idea, condensed and made tangible by human skill. Do not leave home when going upon a journey without a bottle of it in your valise. You cannot possibly put one dollar in any other shape where it can render you so essential service. The Favorite Remedy is almost instantaneous in its action, but does not tear you to pieces with its violence nor nauseate you with disgust. It frees the liver from bile and sets the machinery of your body into normal and healthy operation. Remember Dr. D. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. Ask your druggist for it and take nothing else. Price One Dollar a bottle.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

Despite the efforts of Senators Hoar and Dawes, Mr. Worthington was confirmed collector of the port of Boston by 38 to 14.

The president signed the fortification and agricultural appropriation bills Friday.

The resignation of Prof. Edward S. Holden, director of the Washburn observatory, at Madison, Wis., of his position as professor of mathematics in the United States navy was received at the navy department Friday.

The foreign affairs committee of the house has resolved to allow J. R. Shipherd to hand over for inspection such documents as he chooses, when a decision will be reached as to whether he shall again be allowed to testify.

Gen. E. S. Bragg, of Wisconsin, sends word to the committee appointed to secure an orator for the forthcoming reunion of the army of Potomac, at Detroit, that he accepts the invitation tendered him, and will deliver the address.

General Pope telegraphs the war department that the Mescaleros must be fed or they will starve. As the Indian bureau can not give them provisions, the army must feed them or surround them with enough troops to force a quiet starvation.

The Peruvian minister called upon President Arthur to present an autograph letter from President Montero, expressing the grief of his government and people at the death of Minister Hurlbut, to whom reference was made as "the truest and noblest champion of Peru's cause."

It is said in naval circles that the president has requested Secretary Chandler to make a selection of an officer for nomination as paymaster general, which position has been vacant since August last, and that the secretary has decided to be guided by seniority and that he will make the selection from the pay corps early next week.

The house committee on judiciary has almost unanimously resolved to report adversely on that section of Cobb's bill forfeiting the land grant of the Northern Pacific, as but 600 miles remain to be completed, and the enterprise was hampered by the collapse of Jay Cooke.

In the star-route cases, a deputy marshal reported that he had been unable to arrest John W. Dorsey or to learn his whereabouts. Judge Wylie ordered the crier to call Dorsey's name, when that individual walked up to the bar to plead not guilty. The hearing was adjourned to May 25, the marshal being reminded that he was responsible for the safe-keeping of Dorsey until bail was furnished. Afterward the culprit gave bonds in $10,000.

Officers of the naval engineer corps are very indignant at the effort of line officers of the navy to rob Engineer Melville of the credit of bringing the survivors of the Jeannette to safety and of discovering the remains of De Long. There is a bill before congress to thank Melville and advance his rank. This formal recognition of Melville as the hero of the voyage annoys the line officers, and they are trying secretly to kill the bill. The engineer officers found this out, and have united in a petition to congress urging Melville's claims.

Col. Corbin has received about five hundred responses in the past few days from newspapers in all parts of the country, expressing interest in the project of erecting a monument to the memory of Gen. Garfield and a willingness to assist in the labor undertaking. The prospect is that a subscription list for this purpose will be opened in every town in the country on Decoration day.

The decision of the District of Columbia supreme court in the case of Guiteau, is that jurisdiction is complete where the fatal blow is struck, without regard to the locality of demise. There are at present in Washington but two justices of the United States supreme court, should application be made for a writ of habeas corpus. After the opinion is delivered the assassin will be taken to a solitary cell and placed under a death watch, and not a word will be spoken to him except by persons specially authorized. District Attorney Corkhill has determined to have eminent medical experts hold an autopsy on the brain of the condemned man, when his corpse will be at the disposal of relatives.

The Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Java, Colossus, Massachusetts, and Oregon were all begun about fifteen years ago. They are all still on the stocks in the Brooklyn, Charlestown, and Kittery yards. By a committee, of which Mr. B. W. Harris is the nominal and Seeor Robeson the real head, these six ships are now reported as "unfinished, rotten, and utterly worthless." There has been expended altogether upon the six unfinished, rotten, and utterly worthless ships, according to the reports drawn from the bureaus by Mr. Hewitt's resolution:

Connecticut	$1,188,286
Pennsylvania	879,202
Java	830,203
Colossus	2,063,265
Massachusetts	1,897,020
Oregon	1,986,698
Total	$9,434,674

And not one of the six keels has ever touched water, or ever will touch water.

A Washington special says: The bill establishing a new cabinet office in the proposed department of agriculture will probably pass the senate without a strong negative vote, though in all probability the measure will be so amended that the original framer will hardly recognize his handiwork when the bill comes back to the house for concurrence in the amendments. While many senators fail to see the necessity for the new office, believing the present department of agriculture can secure for the farmer all that is claimed for the proposed bureau, they will hesitate before voting a bill which received the sanction of such an overwhelming majority of the popular branch of congress. There were, it should be remembered, but seven votes against the bill when it passed the house. Previous to that vote it was generally asserted that the senate would not give its assent to the measure, but it can hardly dare to stand in opposition to a proposition which is favored by such numbers of the lower house, and will be content to express its disgust in radical amendments eliminating the crude features against which so much complaint has justly been made.

Senator Vest has made a favorable report from the committee on territories of the bill to establish a United States court in Indian Territory. The jurisdiction of the proposed court is to extend over the entire Territory. The bill provides for the appointment of a United States judge, attorney, and marshal for the court. In addition to the criminal jurisdiction over the territory now possessed by the United States district court for the Western district of Arkansas, the new court is to have the jurisdiction of all offenses committed by a member or members of one tribe or nation of Indians in the Territory against the person or property of a member of any other tribe therein, or the persons or property of members of any other tribes or nation, or by members of two or more tribes or nations against the persons or property of members of other tribes or nations therein. The court shall also have civil jurisdiction of all the suits wherein a citizen of the United States shall be plaintiff or defendant and the adverse party a member of any Indian tribe or nation in the Territory, or wherein any number of citizens of the United States shall be plaintiffs or defendants and the adverse party may be one or more members of one or more Indian tribes or nations in the territory, or wherein one or more members of an Indian tribe or nation in the territory shall be plaintiffs or defendants, and the adverse party shall belong to some other tribe or nation therein: provided that the amount in controversy, exclusive of costs, shall amount to not less than $100 and the cause of action shall have accrued within five years before the passage of the act. Upon conviction for any criminal offense the same punishment shall be inflicted by said court upon the party convicted as it is provided by existing laws of the United States for a like offence when conviction of the United States or any Indian may be had in any court of the United States therefor.

Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

DIED.

Four-score years and four had she seen of shadow and sunshine, joy and sorrow.

Many years a widow, and bereft of several children, who had lived to minister to her tottering steps, yet crossed the Jordan before her, she still held to an unfailing trust in God.

Fifty or more years she had lived on the same farm, and for the last half of that time, had scarce been able to leave her home. A quiet home life, that seems only common place, but, like the modest violet, hidden among the grass and discovered by its perfume which fills the air around it; so this aged mother betrayed to those who were daily near her, the sweetness of a child-like trust.

We feel assured that she has exchanged the infirmities of age for eternal youth and communion with Christ and her loved ones gone before.

WOOD—On May 10th, 1882, at his residence in Tecumseh, Luke Wood, aged 79 years, 9 months and 9 days.

He was born in Otsego county, N. Y., Aug. 1, 1802, married Miss Delia Cranson in 1822, and came to Michigan in 1832. He settled on the farm now owned by the Osborn Brothers, in Franklin, where he lived until eight years ago this spring when he moved into Tecumseh village, living here since. "Uncle" Luke, as he was familiarly called by all who knew him, lived more than the average time alloted to man. He would have been 80 years old had he lived till next August, and next November he would have lived with his present wife 60 years. He leaves a wife and five children to mourn his loss. Luke Wood was an honest man, he was a friend to every one, loved and respected by all who knew him; he always had a pleasant word for every one, young and old, rich and poor. His loss will be felt by the whole community as well as by his beloved family. He leaves a place hard to fill, and lived a life, which if imitated, would make a world of happier, better men.

One voice all over the land goes up from mothers, that says, "My daughters are so feeble and sad, with no strength, all out of breath and life at the least exertion. What can we do for them?' The answer is simple and full of hope. One to four weeks' use of Hop Bitters will make them healthy, rosy, sprightly, and cheerful.

WEST TECUMSEH.

Corn about all planted.

N. C. Arnold lost a horse last week.

John Carson lost two of his children last week by that dread disease diphtheria, and three more are down with the disease, but are better at this writing, Wednesday, P.M. Mrs. Carson went to Cambridge to attend a sick daughter with the same disease some five or six weeks ago and it is supposed that she brought the fatal disease in her clothes, as on the eighth day after her arrival the youngest child was stricken down and it lived only five days. The children have all been sick with the exception of the eldest who is a young man. The neighbors have shown their sympathy for the afflicted by the generous donations that have been left at the gates, not daring to go into the house, and it would not be wise to stop yet until the recovery from this sickness, as under the circumstances they dare not go away from home to procure work and it would not be wise to have them.

The amount necessary to extend the telegraph line into town is nearly all subscribed and it is expected to organize a new company next week.

HOLLOWAY.

The foundation for the Hoxie engine factory is completed. Work on the frame will be commenced as soon as the material is obtained. The building is to be sixty feet square.

Horace and Warren Holdridge, R. M. Boyd and Geo. Holloway started for Kansas last Saturday on a pleasure trip and also to visit friends.

Young ladies, take notice. A fine new buggy on the corner west of the store.

Inspector Chatfield has been visiting the schoolmams for a week or two.

H. E. Wilson says he can "boot" any man in Raisin.

Miss Janie Boyd is in York state visiting relatives.

A. L. Arner left for the vicinity of Grand Traverse with the engineering class from the University. They will remain in camp about a month.

Carlisle Simonds had another runaway last week, caused by the breaking of the wagon-reach. One of the horses badly injured one of its feet, but at present it is improving.

M. D. Billmeyer has purchased a new threshing engine. After getting the latest improvements on his separator he will have one of the finest outfits in town.

RIDGEWAY.

Mr. Asa Russel is quite sick.

Mrs. Mary Ann Barrett is making extensive improvements on her brick residence on South st.

Mr. & Mrs. Chas. Warne, of York state, former residents of this township, are visiting friends in this vicinity.

Alfred Lawton has a summer hand just arrived and it will soon call him papa.

Rev. J. L. Hudson, of Morenci, spent Sunday with us in exchange with Rev. J. Kilpatrick. In the evening Mr. Hudson gave an excellent temperance address and at the close of the meeting obtained considerable stock for the alliance of which he is county agent. A reorganization of the township alliance will take place soon.

SPRINGVILLE.

Last Saturday's rain was accompanied by disappointment over the faces of a good many that were expecting to attend the great show at Tecumseh.

The party at Mrs. Groger's on the 26th ult. was not very largely attended, which was probably on account of the threatening weather. Even those that did come found it very disagreeable getting home, especially those at any distance.

Quite frequently in conversing we hear "Say we go woodchucking."—There has been about $140 worth brought to the front since town meeting.

The few warm pleasant mornings of this week makes everybody look as cheerful as the grass that grows.

Remember the ice cream social on Friday evening.

"To work upon the highway" seems to attract a great deal of attention this week.

How It Was Done.

"How do you manage," said a lady to her friend, "to appear so happy and good natured all the time?" "I always have Parker's Ginger Tonic handy," was the reply, "and thus easily keep myself and family in good health. When I am well I always feel good natured."

That's a Fact.

A man can't work unless he feels well. The hard times have made plenty of people sick simply by worrying them almost out of their wits about money and business. Trouble of mind has brought on trouble of body. There is indigestion, heaviness in the head, and all that. Are you afflicted in this way? Go and invest One Dollar for a bottle of Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy," and it will make a new man of you. It takes the bile out of the blood, and is worth a trip to Rondout, N. Y.,—the Doctor's home—on foot, if you cannot get it more easily. First however, see if your Druggist hasn't got it.

The Deerfield Record says: "The question of the hour is not who set fire to the methodist parsonage, but who said the Rev. E. Dawe did."

A Good Foundation.

In American households the prevailing complaints are weakness of the stomach and its consequences, Indigestion, Nervousness and Rheumatism. Such sufferers can lay a good foundation for health by using Parker's Ginger Tonic as it tones up the stomach and nerves, and keeps the kidneys active to carry off the foul matter.—N. O. Picayune.

The Michigan Southern Association of Universalists will meet at Manchester on Wednesday and Thursday of next week, June 7 and 8.

LETTER FROM CALIFORNIA.

My fruit crop this year, with the exception of apricots will not be as heavy as the last, but my apricot crop is enormous. I shall not be surprised if it should come up to 200 tons. I contracted the crop at $4.60 per ton. All my land here is now planted to orchards—1500 trees the past winter. The barley on my farm in Sorano county is good, but the wheat, owing to the light fall of winter rains and the prevalence of dry north spring winds, will be very light. In York the grain crop of the state this year will fall much below the average.

The craze for fruit tree and vineyard planting the past winter has been beyond all precedent. If the planting is successful, I cannot see how the products of the same, after about five years, can be handled, especially if the law recently enacted, restricting Chinese immigration is enforced. The popular feeling against Chinese laborers in our midst has extended to all classes except agriculturalists or producers of fruits and wines, and they are so few as compared to our whole population that their remonstrances are entirely unheeded. Should the restriction law be effectual for the purpose intended, I am confident that the repeal of the law will be clamored for long before the ten years will have expired. The Chinese fill a gap in our industrial pursuits, whose place, if they are withdrawn, cannot be filled from any other source of labor. It is sheer nonsense to expect a supply of European laborers to take their place. Yet the mercantile and trading classes in our cities and towns have made themselves believe that the country will fill up with laborers from Europe just in proportion to the diminution of Chinese labor, and that they will be well satisfied to labor for the rates now paid for Chinese labor. They entirely lose sight of the fact that of the immigrators from Europe are farmers coming to obtain cheap lands whereon to settle and make themselves homes, and thus become producers on their own account, or they are mechanics who will go to swell our town population. Few come expecting to become hewers of wood and drawers of water for others, and when now and then one does consent to become such for a time, it is only until he can save money enough to start out in something on his own account. The fruit cultivator of California cannot lose his future hope of success and the prospect of such labor. His business at times requires a large labor force. It must be instant in season, and for two-thirds of the year he requires but little labor. The Chinese are the only people that will fill the bill. They come here to sell their labor and for nothing else, and when that labor is not wanted they are content to stand aside and wait until it again is in demand.

My orchards now pay me ten per cent. on a capital of over $100,000 per annum, and in five years with a free unrestricted supply of labor they will double that amount; without such supply, my orchards would be valueless, and what is true of me is equally of other fruit cultivator in the state. There is now invested in the fruit industry of this state about $50,000,000. This large sum is mainly the production of Chinese labor. This large capital is largely used to furnish employment for other labor industries, dependent on the productions of our orchards and vinyards, such as croppers, box makers, tinners, teamsters, women and girls in the canneries, etc. All these industries are invigorated by the judicious employment of Chinese labor in our orchards and vinyards. Indirectly the merchant, the trades, and those engaged in other mechanics come in for their profit too.

The labor system of civilized society is like a complicated machine, moved by one master wheel; disarrange that and the whole thing comes to a stop. The cultivators of the soil constitute the master wheel of the labor machine of civilized society. It is only the products of the soil that vitalizes all other industries. Those products which give most employment to the human family ought to be cherished above others. Such is the climate and soil of this state as make it peculiarly fitted for the production of fruits, and if their production is properly cherished it will give more employment to the laboring classes than any other industry. Now the "Chinese bill" so called, aims a deadly blow at this industry. It had its origin in rare prejudice and ignorant unreasoning fanaticism. The cry was taken up by saloonists, pot-house politicians and demagogues, seeking the rabble vote of our cities and towns, and we will soon see what will come of it.

EVERYBODY GOING TO ADRIAN

To See the Handsomest Woman in the World, and 22 Performing Elephants, 1,000 Wild Beasts, Colossal Circus in Two Rings, and Grand Free Procession of Industry.

The great Forepaugh Show exhibits at Adrian, Tuesday, June 16. In addition to a grandly great circus in two great rings, and a monster menagerie of 1,000 wild beasts, all transported by four great railway trains, there is to be a great, grand, free procession on the day Forepaugh exhibits there. Every town in the county will be represented in this huge, highway holiday parade. In addition to this, the great pageants of "Cleopatra" and Lalla Rookh" will be presented in the show parade. This latter spectacle is described as being the most gorgeous ever seen upon the streets of an American city. The loviest lady in the land has been secured to personify the beautiful Eastern Princess, Lalla Rookh, whom poets describe as "more beautiful than any of those heroines whose names and loves embellish the songs of Persia and Hindostan; more perfect than the divinest images of the House of Azor." In this gorgeous, glittering, oriental pageant, Lalla Rookh is seen reclining in her sumptuous howdah, borne aloft upon the back of a ponderous and kingly elephant, the largest on this continent, whose embroidered velvet trappings touch the ground; a fair young female slave sits fanning the princess through the rose-colored veils, with feathers of argus-pheasant's wings, and the lovely troupe of Tartarian and Cashmerean maids of honor ride upon each side of the Princess upon small Arabian horses. Rajahs and Mogul Lords follow, accompanied by Cavilliers in costly armor, mounted upon

Their chains and poitrels glittering in the sun;
And Camels tufted o'er with Yemen's shells,

In keeping with the author of Lalla Rookh's description of this grand, glittering, lavish and luxurious spectacle, are seen the Guards of the Great Kedar Kahn, with their silver battle-axes, maces of gold, followed by the Great Nazir, or Chamberlain of the Harem, and the retinue of the Court of Delhi, mounted upon elephants, camels and Arabian horses, decorated in oriental trappings, and bearing aloft the royal standards,—the entire scene recalling to the beholder the glories and the grandeur of the distant Indies; the whole forming the most magnificent, picturesque and realistic oriental spectacle ever presented in the New World, requiring the expenditure of a hundred thousand dollars in its preparation, eclipsing all displays of pageantry ever produced by any exhibition, and in itself worth miles of travel to behold. Remember this superb spectacle is presented daily, between the hours of 9 and 10 A. M., and is a great grand, gorgeous, free public festival for all to look at and admire.

The Dead Restored to Life.

Any one desiring to have restored to their normal or natural condition, those organs of life whose functions have become impaired from excessive gluttony, intemperance or otherwise, will find health, strength and vigor in Brown's Iron Bitters. Where the weakness is of an exhaustive or debilitating nature, it removes all lifeless feeling and quickly awakens to new activity.—Herald.

Mr. Zebina S. Taylor, of Tecumseh, has taken the agency for a new book entitled "Real Pen Work—Self Instructor in Penmanship." It is published by Knowles & Maxim, of Pittsfield, Mass., and is one of the best works of the kind now in the market. He also sells the mineraline writing ink in five colors. Mr. Taylor is now canvassing Tecumseh for the book and these inks and he will undoubtedly find a ready sale for them all. He will call upon our citizens as fast as he can get around to them.

A Capital Substitute.

We can't be boys or girls again. Age and infirmity are sure to come, but God did not ordain sickness. That is our fault. There is no Fountain of Youth, but there is a Fountain of Health, and its other name is Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy." It comes from Nature—from the fields and flowers, and like them is "very good." Try it for all complaints of women, Blood troubles, and pains and aches everywhere. If you can't get it at the store, send One Dollar for a bottle to the Doctor, at Rondout, N. Y.

An Impossibility.

Deserving articles are always appreciated. The exceptional cleanliness of Parker's Hair Balsam makes it popular. Gray hairs are impossible with its occasional use.

TOO UTTALY UTTA.

I'm called an asthetic young man,
And wude people say I am silly;
I carway a rose and a fan
And dine on the scent of a lily;
I'm teuched with the buric-a-brac craze,
A piacqde sets my heart in a flutta,
I'm sweet and wefined in my ways—
In fact, I'm decidedly utta.
Yes, utta,
In fact I'm decidedly utta.

I dwess in a picturesque style,
My cosmthe is simple and soulful;
My face weals an asthetic smile
That's half idiotic, half dueful;
I've nothing in common with those
Wude people who spwing from the guits
But that's too absurd to suppose—
I'm quite too decidedly utta,
Yes, utta,
I'm quite too decidedly utta.

On wising I pwactice a while
In fwont of my mirrow each mawning
To catch the expwession and smile
That ignowant people are sqawning.
And when through the city I pass
I set the girls' hearts in a flutta;
Though some of them call me an ass,
What mattahs it while I am utta?
Yes, utta,
What mattahs it while I am utta?

A SUNDAY WITH THE SHAKERS.

Some of our readers have seen the Shaker service. Many have not. For the benefit of both we give a report of a Shaker meeting. Shaker Village is perched on one of the most arduous hills of Androscoggin county, Me. Miles away you can see the large stone fortress-like building where one of the two Shaker families composing the community lives. The second family's home is in a weather-stained, old-fashioned building, almost 100 years of age. It was built in 1795, and the elder said, after service last Sunday: "It's not fit for a Christian to live in. We're making preparations now to build a new one." The Shakers, in their dignified drab coat tails, and Shakeresses in their neat, plain gowns, glistening white-pointed kerchiefs, and their scrupulously-starched bonnets, were marching from the house to the chapel when the reporter arrived. In the church the Shakers formed, standing in two squares, the males in one and the females in the other. The two divisions stood facing each other, with their hands clasped in front of them. In the rear ranks of each body stood the young wards of the community. There were three little boys of 8 to 10 years old, and half a dozen girls, apparently 4 to 14 years, whose long braided hair formed a marked contrast with the closely concealed locks of the Shaker women. The little boys' crowns were closely shaven, while the locks at the base of the head had been allowed to grow down their necks in imitation of the flowing, patriarchal hair of the aged Shakers.

Standing in this position, one voice commenced a strain of quaint song, which all took up. It was something between a hymn and a chant. The melody was strange but pleasing, and was sung by all the voices, male and female, in unison. An impressive effect was given the last chord by all the singers gradually softening the tone and holding the diminuendo in barely a murmur, at the same time lowering their hands from the clasped position to their sides in perfect harmony with the movement of the music. The elder then stepped forward to the space between the two sections of Shakers. The lines of his face indicate a man of remarkable firmness of character. The high sloping forehead, the prominent Roman nose, the unrelaxed facial muscles, his stately demeanor, and the distinct, solemn utterances of a deep musical voice, all pointed to a mind of the most positive convictions and ability of no mean order. The elder read the fourth chapter of St. John. The women and children then sang spiritedly a beautiful hymn. This and all the following hymns were given the same tremulous diminuendo, ending as before.

In the next song one common spirit seemed to move the worshipers in a stately march backward and forward across the floor of the chapel. They kept perfect time with the tune they sang, and marched with the regularity of militia, making square heels, and accompanying their march with a swinging motion of the arms and hands, palms backward. There were several fine singers among the men, and all the women had excellent voices. The juvenile Shakers seemed to enter into the services with the same enthusiasm as the veterans. It was amusing to a spectator to watch the solemn faces and attitudes of the little fellows. Not a suggestion of a smile came over their features, and, to our mind, the staidest Shaker of them all was a lad of perhaps 10 summers. He wore a loose, cherry-colored sacque and a high-buttoned velveteen waist coat. He had a fair, untanned face, and pale blue eyes. The blue veins were seen through the delicate skin covering his temples, and he had a dreamy far away look. The net-locks of light hair fell over his coat collar. He seemed possessed of a most intense spirituality, and was as deeply absorbed in his devotions as the elder himself. Some of the Shakeresses once in a while allowed a sly smile to interrupt the continuous solemnity. The Shakers take these children by adoption, and have more requests to take and bring up orphan and uncared-for children than they can comply with. The wards are indentured to them until they are 21. Then they are at liberty to leave the community and go into the world if they wish. The Shakers educate them and give them the best of home training.

After several marching songs, the Shakers took seats. We had noticed among them one sandy-haired young man, apparently of not more than 25 years, who wore a plum-colored coat and who sang with much unction. The young man stepped forward nervously, drank a little water from a glass, opened a Bible which lay on a window shelf, and, after a nervous lifting of the shoulders and compression of the lips, read a text from the eighth verse of the third chapter of Second Peter: "But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." He then spoke earnestly for about fifteen minutes, without notes, in a measured, distinct and cultured voice. The speaker's words were listened to with the most profound attention by the audience. He was William Paul, the eloquent young preacher of the Shakers. Mr. Paul has been with them about four years. He is older than he looks, having reached the age of 35 years. He was born in Scotland, and educated in Glasgow. There are few pulpit orators who have the power of clothing their ideas in such chaste and eloquent language, or addressing themselves directly to the hearts of their hearers to a greater degree than this young Shaker Scotchman. After he concluded, another song was sung. The preacher then arose again and said: "If any of our visiting friends desire to say a few words they have perfect liberty."

One of the strangers present arose and explained the recently inaugurated custom of passing the contribution box. He said that it had not been originated by the Shakers themselves, but by the outsiders who desired to see the chapel enlarged, in order that they might be accommodated more conveniently. He then passed the hat and got a liberal collection.

The elder arose and said quietly: "Let us lay aside our seats and form a circle." The settees were placed beside the walls. A small circle of singers formed in the center of the chapel. Around this inner circle the other worshipers formed in double file and marched, while all joined in the Shaker hymns, and kept up constantly a swinging motion of their arms and hands in concert with the rythm. They took a very graceful, promenade step, the women leading, and the small boys bringing up the rear. The queenly form and bearing of one woman, apparently one of the elderesses of the community, was noticed by every beholder. A handsome white silk handkerchief and the regal grace exhibited in her walk distinguished her from her sister Shakers. The sightless eyes of one very aged and infirm Shaker who took part in the other exercises, prohibited him from participating in this. Four or five songs were sung and accompanied by this strange, sober walk around. One of the scalp-locked lads was in the file with the elder, and the little fellow both lengthened his stride and drew down his face to equal proportions with the elder.

The marching ceased, and the elder, after a few remarks, read an article from a publication called "The Shaker Manifesto," published by the united societies. The reading was followed by testimonies by the brothers and sisters. One aged, gray-haired brother said: "I'm not ashamed of the Shaker life. I'm glad I have given up the life of self and given my life to God. I want to be a better Shaker." A sister said: "I think the angels have come near unto us in our devotions. I am glad I am a Shaker. At the age of 16 I said to myself: 'Shall I serve myself or the Lord?' Shall I live a life of pleasure or a godly life?' I said I would serve God, and I feel that I have done it. It has been a satisfaction to me to escape many trials, get out of the world, assume the plain dress and language, and live a life of purity. I'm glad I did so. I know I would have been as liable as any woman in this world to succumb to temptations of the world if I hadn't placed myself beyond them." After more marching the venerable blind Shaker closed the exercises by speaking a few words and requesting the audience to remain seated while they passed out. This was done. The Shaker service was over, when the patriarch was reverently led out of the door by a young brother.—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

Nebraska as it Was and Is.

It is believed that over all this vast region once rested an immense lake, compared to which Lake Superior is a mere pond. Over the bottom of this lake were spread through the ages lacustrine deposits of soil from five to two hundred feet deep. A small area on the north side of the state seems to have emerged first, for the soil is entirely gone from it. But it must have been at one time a tropic isle of marvelous luxuriance of vegetable and animal life.

In the hardened clay of its low hills are to be found vast numbers of fossil animals that have no existence outside the tropics. Here were immense numbers of rhinoceri, horned and hornless, some with two horns, some with one, and others with none. Here ranged the hippopotami and vast herds of carnivorous animals; here are found petrified turtles, one specimen, perfectly preserved, being seven feet across. There are several species of fossil monkeys.

"It requires but little imagination," says Bishop Warren, "to cover the region of the mouth of the Niobrara with abundant forests, through which meandered great rivers, full of the hugest animals, while above them chattered the monkey, and flew the gorgeous bird of paradise."

Afterward the surrounding country, covered with the richest soil, arose above the waters; the climate grew more severe, and the tropical animals and birds gave place to those of a colder clime.

One race of men lived here and disappeared; another took their place, but have passed away, leaving but little trace; a third, now known as Indians, luxuriated in the abundant meat of the buffalo, but they are nearly as extinct as the two races that have sunk beneath those waves of land, "unwept, unhonored and unsung."

It seems to be a hard matter for men to conquer this continent. Whether the fourth race has gathered strength enough from allying all kindreds and bloods under the whole heavens for its conquest, is yet to be seen in the coming centuries.

The part now called Nebraska is two hundred by four hundred miles in extent, and contains forty-eight million acres. On the east flows the Missouri River; irregularly, through its whole length, flows the Platte, receiving all its tributaries on the north side.

The state has a slightly undulating surface, and has so rich a soil that after-crops have been removed for thirty years from some places. It shows no sign of needing fertilization, nor will it show such need till the one hundred and fifty feet of soil has been turned into wheat or other crops. The soil most nearly resembles that of the Nile Valley in Egypt. It is perfectly prodigal in the production of fruit. The state has twice been awarded the highest premium of the United States Pomological Society, and thereby been debarred from competing again. One apple has been grown that weighed twenty-nine and a half ounces, and one man raised in a year 14,000 bushels of peaches.

The state was admitted into the Union in 1867. All the early inhabitants came into Nebraska in the so-called prairie schooners—a covered wagon containing all the family and their earthly effects. Finding land to suit, they first erected a house of sods, with places cut for a door and window, which made them a comfortable abode. Many happy homes were hung with tapestry of figured muslin, and whitewashed on the outside for a very trifling cost.—Phila. Sat. Night.

Care of Infants.

Nursing of Infants.—Over-feeding does more harm than anything else; nurse an infant a month or two old every two or three hours; nurse an infant of six months and over, five times in twenty-four hours and no more. If an infant is thirsty, give it pure water or barley water, no sugar. On the hottest days a few drops of whisky may be added to either water or food, the whisky not to exceed a teaspoonful in twenty-four hours.

Feeding of Infants.—Boil a teaspoonful of powdered barley (ground in a coffee grinder) and a gill of water, with a little salt, for fifteen minutes, strain, then mix it with half as much boiled milk, add a lump of white sugar, size of a walnut, and give it lukewarm from a nursing bottle. Keep bottle and mouth-piece in a bowl of water when not in use, to which a little soda may be added. For infants five or six months old, give half barley water and half boiled milk, with salt and a lump of sugar. For older infants give more milk than barley water. For infants very costive, give oatmeal instead of barley. Cook and strain as before. When your breast milk is only half enough, change off between breast milk and this prepared food. In hot weather, if blue litmus paper applied to the food turns red the food is too acid, and you must make a fresh mess or add a small pinch of baking soda. Infants six months old may have beef tea or beef soup once a day, by itself or mixed with other food; and when ten or twelve months old a crust of bread or a piece of rare beef to suck. No child under two years ought to eat at table. Give no candies, in fact, nothing that is not contained in these rules without a doctor's orders.

Summer Complaint.—It comes from overfeeding and hot and foul air. Keep doors and windows open. Wash your children well with cool water twice a day or oftener in the hot season. Never neglect looseness of the bowels in an infant; consult the family physician at once, and he will give you rules about what it should take and how it should be nursed.

Keep your rooms as cool as possible, have them well ventilated, and do not allow any bad smell to come from sinks, privies, garbage boxes, or gutters about the house where you live.

Too Much of a Good Thing.

We have read at least one laughable story of a green cook undertaking to boil "swamp-seed" without knowing how. Prentice Mulford (in the San Francisco Chronicle) tells another, of himself, while doing culinary duty in a California sandbar camp, among the "Forty-niners:"

My experience taught me of some things not thought of before. Once, while housekeeping, I bought a sack of rice. I had no idea then of the elastic and durable properties of rice.

A sack looked small; but rice swells amazingly. When I put the rice on to boil the first swelled up, forced off the lid and oozed over.

Then I shoveled rice by the big spoonful into every empty thing which I could find in the cabin.

Still it swelled and oozed. Even the wash-basin was full of half-boiled rice. Still it kept on. I saw then that I had put in too much—far too much.

The next time I tried half the quantity. That swelled, boiled up, boiled over and also oozed. I never saw such a remarkable grain.

The third time I put far less to cook. Even then it arose and filled the pot. The seeds looked minute and harmless enough before being soaked.

At last I became disgusted with rice. I looked at the sack. There was the merest excavation made in it by the quantity taken out. This alarmed me. With my gradually decreasing appetite for rice, I reflected and calculated that it would take seven years on that bar ere I could eat all the rice in that sack. I saw it in imagination all boiled at once and filling the entire cabin. This determined me. I shouldered the sack, carried it back to the store and said:

"See here! I want you to exchange this cereal for something that won't swell so in the cooking. I want to exchange it for something which I can eat up in a reasonable length of time."

The storekeeper was an obliging man. He took it back. But the reputation the sting of buying an entire sack of rice remained. The "boys" had "spotted" the transaction. The merchant had told them of it. I was reminded of the sack of rice years after.

A Timely Precaution.

Beware of poisonous plants and shrubs. We mention a few of the most common that should not be touched: The two varieties of poison-ivy, sometimes called poison-vine and poison oak, one of which grows erect as a shrub from two to five feet high, and the other as a vine from eight to thirty feet high. Poison sumac, also known as poison elder and swamp dog-wood, growing as a shrub or small tree from ten to eighteen feet high, generally in moist places; the foliage is light green. Of those which should not even be placed in the mouth are the wild carrot, wild parsley, cowbane, hemlock-parsley, water hemlock (the roots of which are deadly poison), and poison hemlock (also a virulent poison;) the root, leaves and berries of pokeweed, scake and jarget are poisonous. Children sometimes eat the berries of the buck-thorn, which is a violent and dengerous purgative, frequently producing dangerous symptoms.

The only safe way to avoid the unpleasant or dangerous effects is to scrupulously refrain from handling or chewing any plant, or any part of it, unless the plant is well known to you and known to be innoxious.

As ivy is one of the most common poisons, the following preventive may be found efficacious: "If you have been in contact with it, as soon as possible thereafter sponge yourself thoroughly all over with strong vinegar or alcohol, with salt sufficient in it to make it briny; then wash off with strong soap-suds.

Cure for the affection: When it breaks out scratch it till the surface is highly irritated then apply a strong solution of oxalic acid. This is very severe, but a single application will be sufficient.

In winter there is a novel method of capturing herring. Like mackerel, they go in schools, and for some reason they will always follow a light. Two or three fishermen provide themselves with torches made of birch bark or cotton batting, saturated with kerosene oil, and on dark nights row along the shores with a torch in the bow of the boat. The boat is rowed as swiftly as possible, and when a "school" is struck the chase begins. The herring dart after the boat, coming close up to it in swarms, and while one of the men rows the other dips up the [illegible] with a dip net.

Woman's Triumph

The case of Mrs. Edward Myers, of Roundout, New York, furnishes an apt illustration of woman's power of endurance. This lady had been treated for months in the usual way for Erysipelas of the hand without benefit. Now until her hand had become a mass of putrified flesh did she turn to Dr. Kennedy proprietor of the "Favorite Remedy" for help.

He at once informed her that it was impossible to save the hand—it must be amputated. She received the terrible intelligence quietly, declined to take ether; stipulating merely to hold her husband's hand during the operation, and underwent the painful process without moving a muscle or uttering a groan. Dr. Kennedy then gave "Favorite Remedy" freely to cleanse the blood and prevent the return of the disease, and Mrs Myers now lives and rejoices in her great deliverance.

"Favorite Remedy" is fast becoming a trusted household friend in all cases of Female Weakness and diseases of the blood. One dollar a bottle. Your druggist has it.

POSITIVELY CURED BY

Benson's Capcine Porous Plasters.

Reasons Why they are Preferred to All Other Porous Plasters or External Remedies:

First.

Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and active vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.

Second.

Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

Third.

Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain at once.

Fourth.

Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

Fifth.

Because over 5000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

Sixth.

Because the manufacturers have received the only medals ever given for porous plasters.

"Contempt should be the best concealed of our sentiments."

What loneliness is more lonely than distrust?—[George Eliot.

Every body drags its shadow, and every mind its doubt.—[Victor Hugo.

Languages begin by being a music, and end by being an algebra.—[Ampere.

He who thinks himself good for everything is often good for nothing.—Picard.

The more honesty a man has, the less he affects the air of a saint.—[Lavater.

Doubt springs from the mind; faith is the daughter of the soul.—[J. Petit Senn.

The gods have a curse for him who willingly tells another the wrong.—[George Eliot.

The world is a book, the language of which is unintelligible to many people.—[Mery.

"Travel improves superior wine and spoils the poor; it is the same with the brain."

Men would not live long in society if they were not the dupes of each other.—[La Bruyere.

Manners are the hypocrisies of nations; the hypocrisies are more or less peefected.—[Balzac.

It is with happiness as with watches—the less complicated, the less easily deranged.—[Chamfort.

"Rivals who blow out each other's brains for the eyes of a coquette, prove that they have none."

In condemning the vanity of women, men complain of the fire they themselves have kindled.—[Lingree.

"The pious man and the athiest always talk of religion: the one of what he loves and the other of what he fears."

"The world is apt to coo in your ear like a dove when you are rich, but if you happen to be poor it kicks like a mule."

It is easy to make sacrifices for those we love, but it is a noble victory to overcome self for the sake of our enemies.

No matter how purely and grandly we live to-day, there is no denying that we may live more purely, more grandly, to-morrow.

The doubts of an honest man contain more moral truth than the profession of faith of people under a worldly yoke.—[X Dondan.

"A moment's work on clay tells more than an hours's labor on brick. So work should be done on the children's hearts before they harden."

In this great society world, lying around us, a critical analysis would find very few spontaneous actions. It is almost all custom and good sense.—[Emerson.

In those countries where the morals are the most dissolute, the language is the most polished; as if they would replace on the lips what has deserted the heart.—[Voltaire.

Great minds comprehend more in a word, a look, a pressure of the hand, than ordinary men in long conversations, or the most elaborate correspondence.—[Lavater.

The art of putting the right men in the right places is first in the science of government; but that of finding places for the discontented is the most difficult.—[Talleyrand.

"Youth is like those verdant forests tormented by winds; it agitates on every side the abundant gifts of Nature, and some profound murmur always reigns in its foliage."

There are many deadly serpents that nestle in the foliage of our most fascinating literature; they coil around the flowers whose perfume most intoxicates the senses.

There never has been a nation that has not looked upon woman as the companion or the consolation of man, or as the sacred instrument of his life, and that has not honored her in those characters.—[A. De Musset.

A young bride being asked how her husband turned out, replied that he turned out very late in the morning and turned in very late at night.

Philosophers say that shutting the eyes makes the sense of hearing more acute. A wag says that this accounts for the many closed eyes seen in church.

Said Brown: "Smith won't have so soft a thing as he has had." "I dont know," replied Robinson; "he'll have a soft thing so long as he doesn't lose his head."

Mrs. Spaggins was boasting of her new house. The windows, she said were stained. "That's too bad; but won't turpentine or benzine wash it off?" asked the good Mrs. Oldbody.

"Oh, dear!" exclaimed Edith to her doll, "I do wish you would sit still. I never saw such an uneasy thing in my life. Why don't you act like grown people and be still and stupid for awhile?"

A little boy went to his first tea party when four years and three months old. Upon his hostess asking him how he liked his tea, he replied, "It is very nice but it tastes very much of the water."

A master was explaining that the land of the world is not continuous. He tasked a boy: "Now, Jack, could your father walk round the world?" "No sir," and why?" "Because he is dead sir."

A fellow named Bob Ditto of New Philadelphia, O., must be a near relative of old Semper Idem, or perhaps his front and hind names are Bob, and he calls himself Ditto for a change. It is all the same, anyway.

A woman returning from market got into a street-car, the other day, with a basket full of dressed poultry. To her the driver speaking sharply, said, "fare!" "No," said the woman. "Fowl!" And everybody cackled.

Nurse—"Pleas'm, isn't Master Tommy to go to bed now?" Tommy—"No, ma, I don't want to! We're all playing at Congress in the nursery, and we've arranged to have an all-night's sitting, and I'm in charge of the bill. Boohoo!"

THE LAPLANDER.—The Laplander's sledge has no runners, but, like himself, it is covered with reindeer skin, and is in shape something like a canoe. Harnessed to this sledge, the reindeer starts off with almost the rapidity of the steam-engine.

The reindeer is not only the Laplander's horse, but his cow, and, during the time that it gives milk, he is freezing large quantities of it, to be used when no more is to be obtained. Then he breaks off a piece, thaws it out, and has again a good article of milk.

The deer is also his food, large herds of them being kept in some parts of the country. From its skin the Laplander makes the roof and floor of his house, his bed, his shoes and stockings, his clothes, and cords and strings for his bow. Without this animal the Laplander would be in a deplorable condition

Women and Wine.

Of the worst foes that women have ever had to contend with, wine stands at the head. The appetite for strong drink in men has spoiled the lives of more women—ruined more hopes for them, scattered more fortunes for them, brought to them more shame, sorrow and hardship—than any other evil that lives. The country numbers tens of thousands—nay, hundreds of thousands—of women who are widows to-day, and sit in hopeless weeds, because their husbands have been slain by strong drink.

"Yes," says the Agricultural World, there are hundreds of thousands of homes scattered all over the land, in which women live lives of torture, going through all changes of suffering that lie between the extremes of fear and despair, because those they love, love wine better than they do the woman they have sworn to love. There are women by the thousands who dread to hear at the door the step that once thrilled them with pleasure; that step has learned to reel under the influence of the seductive poison. There are women groaning with pain, while we write these words, from bruises and brutalities inflicted by husbands made mad by drink. There can be no exaggeration in any statement made in regard to this matter, because no human imagination can create anything worse than the truth, and no pen is capable of portraying the truth. The sorrows of a wife with a drunken husband, or a mother with a drunken son, are as near the realization of hell as can be reached, in this world at least. The shame, the indignation, the sorrow, the sense of disgrace for herself and her children, the poverty—and not unfrequently the beggary—the fear and the fact of violence, the lingering, life-long struggle and despair of countless women with drunken husbands, are enough to make all women curse wine, and engage unitedly to oppose it everywhere as the worst enemy of their sex."

Free to Everyone.

TWO THINGS AT ONCE.—Among the many anecdotes of Sir Edwin Landseer contained in a recent biography, is one about the famous artist's mastery of hand.

At a large party in London, the conversation turned on dexterity and feats of skill with the hand; a lady remarked:

"Well, there is one thing no one has ever done, and that is, draw two pictures at the same moment."

"Oh, I can do that," said Landseer, "lend me two pencils and I will show you."

The pencils were handed him, a piece of paper laid upon the table, and Sir Edwin drew simultaneously and without hesitation, with one hand the profile of a stage's head, all its antlers complete, and with the other the perfect profile of a horse's head.

Both subjects were said to be full of life and energy, and the drawing with the left hand fully equal to the one made with the right.

WHAT SHE CALLED HIM.—A well-known educationalist vouches for the truth of the following:

A teacher in a lower grade of one of our public schools received a new pupil—a little miss of 6 or 7 years, named say, Hattie Brown. After taking her name for the school-rolls, according to the custom, the teacher said:

"What is your papa's name, Hattie?"

"Mr. Brown."

"Yes, but what is his first name?"

"Don't know—his name is just Mr. Brown."

"Yes, yes—I know;" then, as a bright idea struck her, "What does your mamma call him?"

"Oh, I know what you mean now," the innocent child replied; "ma calls him a darned old fool."

It is safe to conclude that the teacher did not register the child's father as D. O. F. Brown.

THE WALTER A. WOOD HARVESTING MACHINES

Take the Lead.

In 1853, 500 Machines were sold.
In 1881, 40,413 were sold, and
47,000 have been ordered for 1882.

But the NE PLUS ULTRA of Harvesting Machinery is the Wood Twine Binder. This machine was first put upon the market in 1880, and 4,184 machines were sold that year. In 1881, the sales swelled to 10,034, and orders for over 12,000 have already been received for 1882.

THE WOOD TWINE BINDER!

Possesses these special points of excellence:

1—It is the most perfect automatic self binder ever made.
2—It effects a positive separation of the bound from the unbound grain.
3—The sheaf is formed and compressed without any strain on the twine until the knot is tied.
4—The grain is straightened by the action of the packer as it enters the binder.
5—The automatic uniform sizing of the bundle, thus relieving the driver of the care of stopping and starting the binder.

Last year's machines proved such a perfect success that they will be built substantially the same for 1882, with such improvements in minor details as may be found necessary.

Every farmer desiring to buy a self binder should examine the Wood Twine Binder before purchasing.

Ten Kickapoo Indians have recently been naturalized in Kansas. If the Kickapoo can vote he can be sent to Congress, and thus a little respectability might be infused into that body.

The New York Herald thinks the present Legislature of that state is the worst specimen ever inflicted on a long suffering people. And there are a good many people in other states who will agree with the Herald on this point.

In view of the rapid destruction of forests in this country, the subject of tree planting is fast coming to the front. Gov. Horatio Seymour, of New York, is an enthusiast in forestry.—He thinks the wild black cherry is one of the most valuable trees, and says in a recent letter that he will give some young plants to any one who wants them.

The Adrian newspapers are indulging in a nice little quarrel over the question as to who was responsible for Navin's escape. Strange to say, there seems to be a difference of opinion in Adrian on this subject. Keep cool, gentlemen. Harsh words are uncalled for. To a disinterested outsider it looks as though honors were about easy on that momentous question.

The Supreme Court of Ohio have rendered a decision declaring the Pond Liquor Law unconstitutional.—The constitution of that state prohibits the enactment of a license law, and the Court decide that the Pond tax law is in the nature of a license and hence contravenes the express prohibition of the constitution. Four judges concur in the opinion and only one dissents.

The Independent Republican movement in Pennsylvania bids fair to be considerable of a shower after all.—Their convention at Philadelphia last week was largely attended, and a full ticket was placed in nomination, composed of well-known, life-long Republicans from different sections of the State. The nominees have all accepted the trust conferred. The rebellion against Don Cameron's dictation is thus assuming alarming proportions and bids fair to revolutionize the party in Pennsylvania. The platform adopted declares attachment to the principles of the Republican party, equal rights before the law, maintenance of the public faith, protection to home industry, denounces the system which makes spoils and patronage the chief end of office-holding, and asserts that Garfield's election meant the reform of the civil service. Barring the protective resolution it is an admirable platform.

The Hudson paving war still waxes warm. The last regular meeting of the Council was not held, a majority of the members absenting themselves. The Gazette has nearly a column of comments on the subject, among them these items:

One thing has marked the course of a portion of this Council from the outset in this paving business, to-wit, an utter disregard of the wishes or feelings of the people most concerned; and it looks as if they were now disregarding the action of the Court.

What an example of cheek to hire a lot of lawyers to enforce a measure against the will of say 19 out of 20 citizens interested, and then ask if it wouldn't be better to spend the money for "improvements"! Had the Council granted the improvements citizens almost unanimously petitioned for, they would not now be spending their money in litigation.

Decoration Day was more generally observed this year throughout the country than in any previous year since the day was set apart for the purpose that has hallowed it. As an exchange truly observes, this holiday has passed through three stages since it was instituted. First it was observed as a funeral occasion, almost every family having some relative or friend among the "honored dead."—Next it became an occasion for buncombe speeches, and during this epoch the celebration of the day suffered a visible decline. The observance has now reached its third and permanent stage. It has been stripped of its purely personal and political aspects and has become a grand, broad, national holiday, on which people can honor the noble men who gave up their lives in the great struggle, and study to some advantage the lessons that have been bequeathed to us from the contest. The day will be observed more and more as the years go by.

MY AMATEUR FARM.

SIXTH WEEK.

Hail fellow, well met,
All dirty and wet,
Find out, if you can,
Who's master, who's man.

—SWIFT.

Here are sweet peas, on tiptoe for a flight;
With wings of gentle flush, o'er delicate white,
And taper fingers catching at all things
To bind them all about with tiny rings.

—KEATS.

"Now then," said Columbus, as he pulled down his vest, placed his feet on the stove hearth, and began picking his teeth with a jack knife, after his Sunday dinner, "the peas must be got in this week. I s'pose you calkelate to put in eighty or ten acres o' corn, but I say unto you, don't do it. Put it all into peas. I take it for granted, Consider, that you want to learn all you can about farmin' this summer, and you made an awful lucky hit when you hired me. My experience is worth a pile to a man who is just commencin' the business, and I am willin' to throw that all in without any extra charge. I believe in bein' frank with everybody. I want to give you my views on this question, and then you can foller 'em or not, just as you like. In the first place, corn is nothin' but a barbarian vegetable. The American Injuns invented it, and they lived mostly on corn, raw venison and fresh fish. But peas, my dear sir, was cultivated by the Greeks and Romans. Cicero and Horace doted off peas and Josephus says that Virgil writ his Georgics under the inspiration o' pea sausage. Queen Cleopatra of Egypt always had pea soup on the table whenever Mark Anthony took dinner with her. Old King John introduced peas and the Magna Charta into England the same season. The French raise peas, the Dutch raise peas, the Germans raise peas, the Russians raise peas, Englishmen, Irishmen and Scotchmen raise peas. I've sowed and harvested thousands of acres o' peas over'n Canada. Every farmer there who raises anything, raises peas. Pea meal is as good as oat meal to develop a farmer's muscle; pea soup can't be beat for women and children; the sweetest pork a man ever carved is pork fatted on peas; pea straw makes the boss sheep fodder, and if you keep your cows on peas you can milk 'em four times every day. Peas is a better crop than wheat by one hundred per cent. Rust, the Hessian fly and the chinch bug may use up the wheat, but nothing ever uses up peas. The bugs get in 'em, of course, but that don't hurt 'em none. It only seems to make 'em the richer. And good buggy peas make heavenly porridge. Why, sir, my wife can tinker up a dish o' pea porridge which is a hull meal of itself, with silver forks and a pewter castor thrown in. There's no dish in England or America quite equal to pea porridge. Mush and milk can't hold a candle to it. Its hearty enough for a man to plow on all day, and its mild enough for a baby in the cradle. For ager shakes it is lightnin' and its a surer antidote for fever than a hull medicine chest. Now, s'pose you put in ten acres o' peas. Fifty bushels to the acre will be a very modest crop. That 'll be five hundred bushels. Save out fifty bushel for family use, feed one hundred and fifty to the stock, and sell three hundred for two dollars a bushel. My stars young man, look at it. The profits from ten acres o' corn is nowhere." This lecture was cut short by Ichabod's discovery that the Captain had been rifling his coat tail pockets, and was just then swallowing the last corner of a red silk handkerchief given him by his first wife before they were married. It was sufficiently lengthy however to give me several new ideas on the question, and I resolved to put in a patch of peas at all hazards. But in order to test the question myself I deemed it prudent to put in two acres of peas and eight acres of corn. The peas were got in after much tribulation, during the week, and this is the way it was done.

Monday, May 9th.—Columbus began plowing for the pea crop in the East orchard. He tried the large Gale and it did not work properly. Then he took the Curtis iron beam, then the Oliver, then the Wizard, then the small sized Gale and finally he went back to the large Gale. Went down town for a new point and when he attempted to put it on he found it was a Curtis point. He went a second time and got a Gale point one size too small. The third time he found one the proper size, and got started. It was then noon. In the afternoon he took an early start. On the third round he ran into a root of an apple tree and snapped the plow point in two. He then drove to town and got two new points so as to have one in reserve in case of an emergency. He wore up one point that afternoon and put on the second just before quitting for supper. I bought six bushels of Golden Crown peas for seed, a prime article, at three dollars per bushel.

Tuesday, May 10th.—Columbus plowed pea ground in the East orchard. Broke a harness tug after dinner and had to go to town to have it mended, which delayed work about two hours.

Wednesday, May 11th.—Ichabod finished plowing the pea ground, and began harrowing it. The harrow teeth were so dull it would not take hold, so he took it to the shop to have the teeth sharpened. Got 200 weight of mill-feed for the cows.

Thursday, May 12th.—Columbus harrowed the pea ground and rolled it. It rained in the afternoon and he sprouted the seed potatoes, which had been stored away in barrels to plant.

Friday, May 13th.—Columbus sowed the pea ground in the forenoon. While he was in to dinner the pigs discovered a hole in the fence of the pasture lot through which they found access to the pea patch, and in an hour's time they had given those peas a lift Ichabod had not counted on. This rather unhitched my arrangements, as I did not intend to begin feeding peas to the hogs until after harvest in the fall. That afternoon I hunted up some more seed peas, but the price had taken a lift, and they cost me four dollars a bushel. Columbus stopped the fence holes in the pasture lot, and put the lane gate on its hinges.

Saturday, May 14th.—Columbus sowed peas again in the forenoon. The sky began to grow hazy quite early in the day and at one o'clock it began to rain. The peas must be covered however before Saturday night, so Ichabod put on his high top boots and went at it. The rain continued raining and Columbus kept on dragging. It was a rough and tumble struggle for the mastery. At five o'clock the dragging was done and the rain was coming down in torrents. When Ichabod came to the house he resembled a Sioux Indian just escaped from a cyclone. We rolled him up in horse blankets and Buffalo robes, laid him behind the kitchen stove, and gave him a quart of hot peas porridge, which his wife had thoughtfully prepared for him.

Hail fellow, well met
Come out of the wet;
Come in, if you please,
And get some of our peas.

When a shake of the ague a person has got,
There is no panacea like peas porridge hot;
While fever and small pox—so I have been told,—
Are cured in a jiffy with peas porridge cold.

Mr. J. Q. A. Lawrence, of Trenton, N. J., writes: "For several years my wife's health was very poor. It began with a miscarriage from which she never fully recovered, and consequently suffered many aches and pains. I was advised to give her Brown's Iron Bitters. I did so. Her improvement began at once, and she says 'she now feels like a young girl.'"

How to Cook Rice.

Rice is becoming a much more popular article of food than heretofore. It is frequently substituted for potatoes as the chief meal of the day, being more nutritious and much more readily digested. At its present cost, it is relatively cheaper than potatoes, oatmeal or grain grits of any kind. In preparing it only just enough cold water should be poured on to prevent the rice from burning at the bottom of the pot, which should have a close fitting cover, and with a moderate fire the rice is steamed rather than boiled until it is nearly done; then the cover is taken off, the surplus steam and moisture allowed to escape, and the rice turns out a mass of snow white kernels, each separate from the other, and as much superior to the usual soggy mass, as a fine mealy potato is superior to the water-soaked article.

IN twenty days the days will begin to shorten. When is our summer going to come in this year?

STREET Commissioner Jordan is building new crosswalks this week in different parts of the village.

MR. G. P. SPARKS was the recipient of the California letter which we give to our readers this week.

ADRIAN has a new social organization called the "Quinine Club." It must be a pretty sweet society.

PROF. D. A. HAMMOND, of Blissfield, has been engaged as Superintendent of the Tecumseh schools for the ensuing school year.

SHALL we celebrate the coming Fourth of July? Go to the Council Rooms to-morrow evening and help decide the question.

THE M. E. parsonage is undergoing repairs which will both improve the appearance and increase the convenience of the house very much.

THE telephone line from Ann Arbor to Adrian was commenced last Monday. The contractor began work at Adrian and is coming this way.

THE Board of Review of this township made but few changes in the assessment roll. Those which were made increased the assessment of some persons.

THE work on the moulding room at Brewer's foundry is progressing rapidly. The roof will be on this week, and the moulders will be at work next week.

ROBT. BOYD, Warren and Horace Holdridge started for the west last Saturday, intending to take a trip through Kansas, Missouri and the Indian territory.

L. F. WHEELER'S new stereopticon instruments have arrived from Philadelphia, but owing to a blunder some of the parts were misplaced and have been sent for. On their arrival he will soon put the intruments in running order.

THE value of advertising received an emphatic proof in this office the other day. E. C. Coryell left a notice offering his shed at the M. E. church for sale. Within two hours thereafter and before the notice was put in type he had disposed of it.

J. W. PATTERSON has already commenced work on his stores. The occupants have all vacated. Miss Dingman has moved to Lee's old place, first door west of Gainslys, Eaton's dry goods from whence they came, and the Tupper shoe stock to Adrian.

Detroit Evening News: Liquor bonds have been put up to $4,000 at Rome, Lenawee co. The consequence is that there is not much liquor sold there, but the pathway leading up to Adrian is worn smooth by the weary footsteps of the Roman sufferers.

A NEW time table went into effect on the Jackson Branch last Sunday. The change of the passenger trains is practically nothing, there being four and five minutes change on two trains. The freight trains both north and south leave considerably earlier than heretofore.

DIPHTHERIA is raging in the family of John Carson, who lives about two miles north-west of the village in the Bowen neighborhood. He lost two children last week and another is in a critical condition. The disease is confined to that family and with the precaution taken to control it there is no danger of its spreading.

BERT CATLIN has obtained a position in the foundling hospital at Detroit, and he will spend his summer vacation there instead of at home. This is an excellent position for a young medical practitioner. He will receive compensation sufficient to pay his board, and can go on with his medical studies in the fall without any interruption. We are glad to hear that Bert is doing so well.

WE have received from County Clerk Hunter a copy of the proceedings of the Board of Supervisors for last year.

WE regret to announce the death of Rev. J. W. Allen, of Omaha, Neb. He will be remembered by many here as for many years pastor of the Congregational church at Franklin.

ALL who are interested in the celebration of the coming Fourth of July are invited to meet at the Council Rooms to-morrow, Friday, evening, June 2d, to discuss the question, and if deemed advisable to appoint the necessary committees and proceed with the work.

"J. B. Hough and Miss Etta Ford, married Monday, May 29th, at Port Washington, Wis.," says a neat little card received at this office. Jim has been one of the "suspects" for some time, and now he has come out in open rebellion against his bachelor brothers. We hope he may never rue it.

THE Sons of Temperance of Springville will give an Ice Cream Festival at Springville on Friday eve., June 2. Proceeds to help pay for the new organ. Every preparation will be made to make it very pleasant for our patrons. A good literary is one of the attractions. Our cornet band will give us help. Let all who love to see temperance live come out.

THE graduating class of the Tecumseh High School number nine members, all young ladies, and they will compare favorably with any of the classes which have hitherto graduated. The names of the illustrious nine are: Hellen Church, May DeWolf, Leila Doty, Lizzie Hayden, Gertie Hause, Elida James, Jennie Nyland, Florence Shepard, Allie Satterthwaite.

CIRCUS DAY.

It has been some time since Tecumseh has been blessed with a circus, so our people were all waiting anxiously for last Saturday to come, and with it Maybury, Pullman & Hamilton's mammoth shows. The day arrived and with it the circus, but entirely uncalled for a glorious rainy day. The old weather prophets said the sky would be clear before eleven as the rain commenced before seven, but their predictions failed, for the sky cleared only in the eyes of a number whose vision seemed brightened by the dampness of external and internal moisture. In fact Tecumseh enjoyed a day which could be called an old fashioned "drunk." As near as we could calculate there occurred sixteen fights; our reporter kept the number particular as far as eleven and then gave up in disgust, making up his mind to report the whole proceedings all in a lump. With the exception of five cracked heads no one was seriously injured. The circus was a very good one and all who attended in the evening report a good time and a bad cold. All in all perhaps the day was not a failure. A part of our people had a good trade and then it gave the worthy correspondent of the Adrian Times a chance for much amusement watching the people and a day of rest from his arduous professional cares.

DECORATION DAY.

Of all the holidays in the American calendar Decoration Day appeals most earnestly to the sympathies and nobler emotions of the heart, and when through inadvertance or for some other cause it seems inexpedient to hold a public celebration, the day is never permitted to go by in Tecumseh without being honored with some kind of an impromptu observance. Last Tuesday afternoon, a dozen or more of the "old vets", reinforced by some twenty young men, mostly members of company C, assembled at the Opera House where a few interested ladies had brought a collection of flowers. They proceeded in a body to the cemetery and there sought out the graves of their fallen comrades and left on each one a beautiful bouquet. The ceremony was destitute of pomp and parade. There was no brass band in attendance and no surging crowd of people. But the afternoon was a beautiful one and nature seemed to echo the sympathetic heart beats of those few thoughtful young men who honored themselves by thus honoring our soldier dead. After the simple ceremony was over they halted beneath the shade of an evergreen, where a few remarks were made, and a committee of three was chosen to have charge of an appropriate public observance of the day next year. This committee is A. W. Mills, H. W. Stevens, and Jehiel Davidson, three good men and true, and who will faithfully perform the trust committed to their charge. The following are the names of those soldiers whose graves were decorated. As we could not get the Reg. and Co. of part of them we have omitted them entire:

S. M. Kneeland, J. W. Beers, Eliphalet Wood, Faron Anderson, Alanson Conklin, Morris Roberts, Henry Stout, Alvin Tripp, Jas. McNair, Jno. Durling, Jas. Wheeler, J. C. Gilbert, Wm. McCaughan, Warren Estes, Martin Pennock, Uri Carter, James Morseman, Harlow Smith, Webster Smith, Emery C. Waller, Abel Harding.

THE HERALD will be furnished to new subscribers from this date until Jan. 1, 1883, for seventy-five cents.

MRS. SARAH CAMERON, of San Francisco, Cal., is visiting her sister, Mrs. Alfred Lewis, of Lake Ridge.

REV. J. W. HENRY, recently of Williamston, Mich., but formerly a missionary to the Society Islands, will occupy the Baptist pulpit of this village next Sunday morning and evening. Preaching in the morning and lecturing on the Islands from a missionary stand point in the evening.—Mr. Henry is of English descent, but a native of Tahiti. He is also a grandson of the veteran missionaries Henry and Osborn, whose names are associated with that epoch in missionary annals known as "The Night of Toil."

Blissfield Advance: Prof. Hammond, of the west side school, has just been engaged as superintendent of the Tecumseh schools, beginning his engagement next fall. Mr. Hammond has labored hard in the interest of the school of which he has been principal for nearly five years, and his ability and success as a teacher is unquestioned, and from a class of forty, when he assumed the charge of the school, he has now an enrollment of nearly eighty scholars in his department.—The opportunity which Blissfield was too blind to see, has been taken advantage of by the Tecumseh people and in Mr. Hammond they get a teacher, though their schools are graded second in the county, who is perfectly competent to assume all responsibilities.

WE would again call the attention of our citizens to the meeting of the State Sunday School Association which will take place at the Opera House in this village June 13, 14 and 15. Many of the most noted Sunday School workers in the country will be present, and about three hundred delegates will be in attendance. Tecumseh has established a reputation for hospitality and her good name in this regard must not be permitted to suffer. The delegates to the convention must be properly entertained and we have no doubt that the residents of the village will make their arrangements accordingly. Let the house cleaning all be done up before that time and an extra supply of provision provided to entertain company about three days.

Pursuant to the call by the committee for all old soldiers to meet at the residence of Jehiel Davidson for the purpose of marching to the M. E. church to hear the Rev. R. S. Pardington on "Our Fallen Comrades" there was a goodly number present of which the following is the list of names and regiments:

A resolution was passed that all wishing to receive a copy of "Michigan in the War," should leave their names with the committee, A. W. Mills and H. W. Stevens, as every soldier is entitled to a copy free of charge except the ex press. We deem it of value and profit to thus secure for each and every old soldier this valuable book.

THE N. R. AND A. A.

The National Relief and Accident Association is getting finely started in business. Mr. C. R. Cole and several of his local agents, who have heretofore been to work for an Ohio company, have taken a general agency of the National Relief and Accident and are doing an extensive work. Mr. Cole will make his headquarters at Adrian. As yet the company has not met with a single death loss and but two accident losses, one of which occurred in Portland, Mich., and the other in Tecumseh. The following are the receipts given by the parties who sustained the loss:

Received of the National Relief and Accident Association of Tecumseh, Mich., paid to me by their agent Mr. A. J. Dickson, of Portland, Mich., my entire claim against the said Association for an injury I received on the 28th day of April, 1882. I joined the National Relief and Accident Association just two days before I met with said injury.

J. O. VANDUYNE.

COUNTY CLIPPINGS.

Adrian is considering the expediency of introducing the electric light.

Hon. B. L. Baxter, of this village, delivered the Decoration address at Deerfield last Tuesday.

The Clinton schools will close tomorrow. They have but nine months of school in that village this year.

Morenci Observer: Some of the "County Crumbs" of the Adrian Press ought to be swept up by the office boy and deposited in the back alley.

If you wish peaceful slumber at night, in spite of cough or sore throat, take a dose of Brown's Iron Bitters before going to bed. It is very soothing and refreshing. Try it.

Hudson Gazette: "Junction" and "conjunction" are terms we frequently hear used now. But an old fellow over the river got the farthest off the track, when telling of the "injection" they had served on the Common Council!

Blissfield Advance: The Adrian supervisors raised the assessment on personal property of N. B. Carter from $40,000 to $75,000. Quite a lift. Other property was raised in the same manner and it looks as if Adrian people will pay their full share of taxes after a while.

Hudson Post: The streets of Hudson last Sunday was a hippodrome and the village swarmed with "fair women and brave men," and a general equine display. The sequel shows that some were too brave and the majesty of the law was vindicated in the arrest and fining of some of the foreign Jehus. Charity begins at home—arrests are made abroad!

Hudson Gazette: A narrow escape. Hudson people little realized the nearness of a fearful calamity. Smith's double Uncle Tom's Cabin Co. were to have come Monday evening, but they jumped their Hudson date and sailed right through this thriving little city to Buffalo without a pause!—Our earnest thanks go out for this unthought dispensation.

Morenci Observer: The new machinery for the manufacture of elm hoops was placed in position in Youngs' saw-mill this week, and the new enterprise promises to be quite an important acquisition to our manufacturing interests. It will steadily give employment to ten or a dozen men, and as the timber used for the purpose will be purchased in the immediate vicinity, the cost for labor and material will nearly or quite all be disbursed in this immediate locality, making it in this respect a good thing for all.

Morenci Observer: We hear that the village saloons report that the reform that has been going on among the drinking classes in Morenci has sensibly diminished the receipts of their concerns. Well, let the grand work of saving men go on, and we trust that our friends who have been instrumental in this movement will continue to fight it out on that line, letting the glove-fingered dandies who are sturdily begging for money to be sent away off somewhere else, ostensibly for the temperance cause, a severe letting alone.

Rev. E. Dawe, of Deerfield, who was arrested for setting fire to the methodist parsonage, has been discharged, the prosecution failing to bring any tangible evidence against him. In summing up the history of the affair the Record says: "Thus ends the lamentable scandal which has been the theme for discussion during the past year, to the detriment of everything else for the good of our village, and the cause of many angry and hastily spoken words between old and warm friends, words no sooner uttered than deeply regretted. And now that the "cruel war" is over let it be dropped and forgotten."

DIED.

HANFORD.—In Adrian, May 28th, Mr. Joseph Gorham Hanford, aged 86 years.

He was born in Rome, N. Y., 1795, he moved to Monroe co., same state, in 1811 and lived there until 1855, when he moved to Tecumseh, Mich., where he has resided ever since, with the exception of a few years past, while living with his only daughter in Adrian. After 86 years of useful life, and as a respected citizen, why should he say, "my days are few, and evil have been the days of my pilgrimage." He has passed through all the trials and vicisitudes of pioneer life and received more than an ordinary share of the world's cheer and comfort. The face of the country has changed and the wilderness has budded and blossomed like the rose. A few months more would have completed 60 years of wedded life with his companion. Five sons and one daughter have grown up under his roof to respected manhood and womanhood, and two have preceded him to the better land. The members of the family are bowed in sorrow by the loss of one whose cheerful spirit made home and all its associations dear to them. The funeral was held Sunday afternoon, May 29, at the residence of his son, Abraham Hanford, of this village. From amid the scenes of his maturer years, he has passed on to the more perfect life above. "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away." S.

Inaugural Addresses.

HOW SOME PRESIDENTS HAVE INDULGED IN THE CLASSICS.

Gen. Taylor, when President, although the document was read and submitted to his Cabinet, had a sentence, which was subsequently altered in the printed documents, in which it was boastingly averred that our country "was at peace with all the world," and "had amicable relations with the rest of mankind." When "all the world" was embraced, "the rest of mankind" must have been intended for the undiscovered country which John Cleaves Symmes expected to bring to light from the "bowels of mother earth."

The inaugural address of President Harrison, well written and with many excellent things in it, was so much devoted to English classics and to Roman history as to create much sport. It was a document like Gov. Dennison's, that one could safely swear by, for there was nothing in the heavens or on the earth like it. Dennison's was ridiculous for its big and unmeaning words and his attempt to show off his knowledge of a dead language, while that of Gen. Harrison was almost as much laughed at, from his drawing on Roman and Grecian history and the sayings of English authors.

The inaugural in its first paragraph declares an intention to present to the people a summary of the principles which would govern the new administration, and in doing this he thus commences:

"It was a remark of a Roman Consul, in an early day of that celebrated Republic, that a more striking contrast was observable in the conduct of candidates for offices of power and trust before and after obtaining them, they seldom carrying out in the latter case the pledges and promises made in the former. However much the world may have improved in many respects in the lapse of upwards of 2,000 years since the remark was made by the virtuous and indignant Roman, I fear that a strict examination of the annals of some of the modern electoral governments would develop similar instances of violated confidence."

The President did this, no doubt, to pave the way for unavoidable breaking of promises made in the heat of a canvass. If the custom of breaking promises and pledges by candidates existed in Rome 2,000 years ago, how faithfully it has been transmitted to the present generation! Again, the inaugural, in relation to political parties, says:

"It was the beautiful remark of a distinguished English writer that in the Roman Senate Octavius had a party and Antony had a party, but the Commonwealth had none. Yet the Senate continued to meet in the Temple of Liberty, to talk of the sacredness and beauty of the Commonwealth, and to gaze at the statues of the elder Brutus and of the Custii and Decii, and the people assembled in the forum, not as in the days of Camillus and the Scipios, to cast their free votes for annual magistrates or pass upon the acts of the Senate, but to receive from the hands of the leaders of the respective parties their share of the spoils, and to shout for one or the other, as those collected in Gaul or Egypt and the Lesser Asia would furnish the larger dividend. The spirit of liberty had fled, and, avoiding the abodes of civilization, had sought protection in the wilds of Scythia or Scandinavia. And so, under the operation of the same causes and influences, it will fly from our Capitol and our forum. A calamity so awful, not only to our country, but to the world, must be deprecated by every patriot, and every tendency to a state of things likely to produce it if not immediately checked. Such a tendency has existed—does exist."

And so on to the length of the entire inaugural, the good old man, for none doubted Gen. Harrison's goodness of heart or the purity of his patriotism, went on, drawing his illustrations from Roman history and English writers. The address was prepared at his home, and written at his leisure. A day or two before his inaugural, Daniel Webster (as the tale is told in a book of interesting reminiscences of Webster, by his devoted friend and confidant, Harvey) met Gen. Harrison, and suggested to the President that as he (Harrison) was overwhelmed with business, Mr. Webster had sketched out an "inaugural" for him. Mr. Webster had been selected for Secretary of State. The General replied that it was unnecessary, as he had it already written. "Will you allow me to take it home and read it to-night?" asked Mr. Webster. "Certainly," said the President, "and please let me take yours." So they exchanged documents. Next morning when they met, Gen. Harrison said to Mr. Webster, "If I should read your inaugural instead of mine everybody would know you wrote it, and that I did not. This is the only official paper that I propose to write, for I do not intend to interfere with my Secretaries; but this is a sort of acknowledgment on my part to the American people of the great honor they have conferred upon me in electing me to the Presidency, and, although my inaugural is not so suitable as yours, still it is mine, and I propose to let the people have it just as I have written it. I must deliver my own instead of yours."

When Mr. Webster found that the President was bent upon using his own inaugural (I quote from the book,) Mr. Webster desired to modify it, and get in some things that were not there, for, as it then stood, he said it had no more to do with the affairs of the American government and people than a chapter in the Koran. Gen. Harrison reluctantly consented to let Mr. Webster take it, and he spent a large portion of the next day in modifying it. He was engaged to dine with Mr. Seaton, of the firm of Gates & Seaton, of the National Intelligencer, one of the warmest of Mr. Webster's admirers. When Mr. Webster came in Mrs. Seaton remarked to him, as he arrived late, that he looked fatigued and worried. Mr. Webster was sorry that she had waited dinner for him. "That is of no consequence at all, Mr. Webster," said she, "but I am sorry to see you so worried and tired. I hope nothing has gone wrong. I really hope nothing has happened." "You would think that something had happened if you knew what I have done. I have killed seventeen Roman Proconsuls as dead as smelts, every one of them!" That is, he had purged the inaugural of that many allusions to them. If the anecdote is true—Mr. Webster is its author—the inaugural of Gen. Harrison must have been a condensed edition of Gibbon's Rise and Fall of the Roman Empire instead of an inaugural address of an American President.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Miscellaneous Recipes.

Baked Egg Plant.—Trim off the stem end and boil the egg-plant for twenty minutes in salt-water, and then lay in the colander to drain until perfectly cold; peel open and take out the seed, mash the egg-plant smooth, pouring off any water that comes, and add to it half a grated nutmeg, a saltspoonful of white pepper, half a teaspoonful of salt, teacupful of milk, a teaspoonful of butter, two eggs, and bread-crumbs enough to make a thick batter of it; bake for twenty minutes in the dish you will serve it in; two tablespoonfuls of minced ham is an improvement.

To Cook a White fish.—Choose one that weighs about seven or eight pounds; boil it until it is done, then take out all the bones; take a quart of sweet milk, two onions, and a little summer savory; boil until the milk is thoroughly seasoned, thicken it with flour, using enough to make a thin paste; add butter, pepper and salt to suit your taste. Then put in a pudding dish a layer of fish and a layer of dressing; cover the top with rolled cracker, as you do escalloped oysters; bake for three quarters of an hour, or until the top is a golden brown. Serve with mashed potatoes, spiced currants and the vegetables of the season.

Cream to Use with Layer Cake.—Take one pound of blanched almonds, pound to a paste, one coffee cup of thick sour cream, two tablespoonfuls of corn starch scalded in a little sweet milk, beat all together and spread between the layers of cake; flavor with a little almond extract. This is very rich, and is suitable for the nicest kinds of cake. For more common use an inviting cream may be made in this way: Take a pint of sweet milk, thicken it with half a cup of corn starch, add half a cup of sugar, and boil until the cream or custard is of the consistency of starch. When almost cool add one tablespoonful of lemon and vanilla and spread between the layers of cake.

Pancakes for Luncheon.—These are made of eggs, flour and milk. The just proportions are one tablespoonful of flour to each egg. To make small pancakes, beat two eggs thoroughly and add sweet milk. Then take two tablespoonfuls of flour, work into a thin paste and ductile batter by adding the milk and eggs and a little salt. Grease the pan with a piece of sweet lard or butter and stir briskly to prevent adhering to the bottom. When the under side is sufficiently browned, turn it. Leave the cakes folded, with sugar or honey and butter between the folds, or sugar alone. If this be too solid, add more eggs and use less flour. A slight sprinkle of grated nutmeg will be an addition.

Plain Duffs.—You may call it steam pudding. You can make it in a jiffy, and the only time it takes is the boiling of it. You are caught sometimes, and if pudding is the word this is the way to get out of it. One quart of flour, sifted; a teacupful of currants and a tablespoonful of baking powder, and a pint of suet; mix them well first, and then add enough cold water to make a stiff batter; put her in a pudding tin cover her with a cloth, and let her go it in a steam boiler for one hour and a half. If you want a richer duff, just go through the same thing, adding the yolks of five eggs and a tablespoonful of butter. The Sauce—You see you ain't got no sugar in them. This here sauce is quick, too. You want two tablespoonfuls of butter, and just a trifle less of sifted flour, and you grate a quarter of a nutmeg into it, and you add a teaspoonful of vanilla extract, or half a teaspoonful of lemon essence, and a whole teacupful of granulated sugar. Now smooth it all together, adding teaspoonfuls of warm water from time to time as you boil it until you get it to the thickness you want; but after all, I've seen many a nice lady take that sauce and then dash molasses on the whole thing, and say molasses was the best.

A large number of men and women suffer from their Kidneys, throughout their lives. The defective action of the Kidneys is the source of many distressing diseases, and induces Rheumatism, pains in the back and loins, indisposition to exertion, muscular lassitude, nervous trembling and weakness. Kellogg's Columbian Oil is warranted to cure this distressing disease in all its forms.

It is a remarkable fact that the center of population of the United States has advanced in a straight line since 1790, due west from Baltimore.

WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY & LIVER CURE

Disease is an effect, not a cause. Its origin is within; its manifestations without. Hence, to cure the disease the cause must be removed, and in no other way can a cure ever be effected. WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY AND LIVER CURE is established on just this principal. It realizes that of all diseases arise from deranged kidneys and liver, and it strikes at once at the root of the difficulty. The elements of which it is composed act directly upon these great organs, both as a food and a restorer, and by placing them in a healthy condition, drive disease and pain from the system.

95 Per Cent.

For the innumerable troubles caused by unhealthy Kidneys, Liver and Urinary Organs; for the distressing Disorders of Women; for Malaria, and for physical derangements generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

Atmosphere of the Table.

It is impossible to estimate properly the immense influence which is exerted upon a household by the atmosphere of the family table. If it is true that one does not come out of a room the same person he went in, the mind ever after retaining the impress of what affected it there, what great results must be achieved from the meeting three times a day in the dining-room, from the conversation indulged in, and the sentiments expressed there. A neat, well-ordered table is in itself a lesson to the children.

I have noticed that a sensitive child almost invariably has better manners when dressed in his best, and have seen with surprise the effect, produced upon a certain small boy of my acquaintance by handsomely dressed ladies who are polite to him. To the inviting table, where there should always be something attractive, however simple the meal may be, most children will come prepared to behave properly. It is really worth while, and when philosophically considered, is a matter of great importance to lay aside as far as possible all thoughts of hard work done before and to be done after the meal, and to allow no vexatious questions to be discussed at this time. The habit of brooding over our work, and exhausting ourselves by going all over it in our minds, is one to be studiously avoided. There is nothing takes from one's energy more than this, and it is a frequent cause of insanity. Everybody knows that food digests better when in agreeable company. It was something more than a pleasantry which made a friend remark that he could not have his wife and child pass the summer away from him as it gave him the dyspepsia. The poor child who comes to grief at the table, and is sent away from it with his dinner half eaten, and who suffers the whole afternoon with an undigested lump of food in his stomach, is to be pitied, and it is a wise plan to explain to children that in this way they will be punished for bad conduct at the table.

It follows, then, that pleasant surprises in the way of preparing favorite dishes that good taste and much painstaking in arranging all the appointments of the table and dining-room, rise above the mere ministering to the animal existence, and affect the fine issues of life. Good behavior and cheerfulness ought to accompany each meal as naturally and unwavering as bread and butter. The happy laughter which distributes nervous force, and calls the blood from the brain, allowing the stomach to get its share, should be heard more frequently at our tables. No one should feel at liberty to say one word that is not kind and thoughtful, any more than he would withold a sufficient quantity of food. These facts need more careful consideration than they have usually received.

Labor.

"Ho! all who labor—all who strive!
Ye yield a lofty power;
Do with your might, do with your strength;
Fill every golden hour."

Assuredly labor is our birthright—and what a great and glorious privilege is that "most noble dower!"

How dark and drear the prospect that lies before that unhappy being who is physically or mentally debarred from thus fulfilling one of our Creator's great commands! If not to work why were we sent upon this beautiful and ever teeming earth? Surely it was not to lie with idly-folded hands upon a rose-leaved couch, watching the busy toilers perform their tasks.

Think of the healthful, invigorating effect of a morning passed in real hard work. My life on it, the night that follows such a morning will be far more sweet and refreshing than that accorded to the day-dreamer who, idly lounging through those sun-lighted hours, has wasted the precious moments that were lent, not given.

But you—oh, world-renowned—who with laurel crowned brow, have won the meed of thousands—whether philosopher, or poet, or artist, whether your hand has wielded the all-powerful pen, reproduced on canvas nature's grand and lovely scenes, or by harder toil hewn from the marble blocks of life—to you I pay my homage, oh, heaven-gifted one who by ennobled labor, have kindled a ray of enthusiasm in many a life that else might have been dark and drear. Your work has not been wrought in vain!

But in our admiration of high intellect, let us not omit our tribute to the mechanical laborers, for without them our every comfort and civilization would be lost. The toilers of the land and sea, of the loom, of the forge and the mine, are our fellow-workers, and numberless others whom it would be impossible to name, for

"The workshop must be crowded
That the palace may be bright;
If the plowman did not plow,
Then the poet could not write."

Thunder.—Charning.

The thunder which accompanies the lightning, writes one authority, as well as the snap attending the electric spark, has not yet been satisfactorily accounted for. Both, no doubt, arise from a commotion of the air brought about by the passage of electricity, but it is difficult to understand how it takes place. Even if this difficulty were cleared, there still remains the long rolling of the thunder, and its strange rising and falling to account for; the echoes sent between the clouds and the earth, or between objects on the earth's surface, may explain this to some extent, but not fully.

The principle involved in churning is the thorough agitation of the contents of the churn so as to cause the rupture of the minute fat globules present in the milk, and the incorporation or kneading of these ruptured fat globules into larger or smaller masses of butter. It is held by some authorities that the temperature of the milk in summer should not exceed 62 degrees; and in very hot weather may be under 60; while during cold weather, the milk should be about 2 degrees higher when churning.

SHOE-PEGS.—To a Massachusetts man, Joseph Walker, is due the credit of inventing the shoe-peg. Previous to the year 1818 its use had not been known, and the invention gave a new start to the manufacture of boots and shoes. Up to that date such articles had been sewed, and the peg, made at first by hand, came in to revolutionize the trade. It was, however, the custom of shoemakers who lived away from the manufacturing center to make their own pegs by hand even down to recent times, but the machine-manufactured peg has now superseded all such slow work, just as the horseshoe nail manufacture is now almost wholly in the hands of establishments that make them by machinery. The usual story comes with the introduction of the shoe-peg, to the effect that some unscrupulous parties tried to swindle the unsuspecting by endeavoring to sell shoe-pegs as a new kind of oats. But this tale is like many others, to be read, and then "taken under advisement."

St. Petersburg in Summer.

A traveler should always make it a point, when he finds it possible, says a correspondent of the London Times, to visit a country when it is in what is called its own element. Russia is the land of snow and ice, and may probably be seen to advantage in skating and sledge-driving weather. All provisions are here made against the discomforts of a hard winter. But against the scourge of the summer dust which sweeps day and night over St. Petersburg, all the pumps drawing water from all the four branches of the Neva are inefficient. There is nothing for it but to turn one's back upon it; and that is what every man does who can manage it. The city is left to a few priests, the police, officers of her Britannic Majesty's squadron, who are on a week's holiday, and to myself; and the Hotel de l'Europe, the best in the town, is being swept, scraped and painted like a London club in mid-summer, for this is the dead season in St. Petersburg, and this place is really too much of a thing for a man to have it all to himself.

What a town it is! How large, how dismally empty! How it squats like an immense alligator half in and half out of a swamp, modeled on Amsterdam, and reminding one of Venice! What miles and miles of "prospects," or, as the French would say, "boulevards;" what endless succession of wide, open spaces and magnificent distances, of long straight lines of walls and rows of trees, and interminable avenues contrived, as it were, to allow the town ample room to run out of town! A city of churches, convents and palaces, of steeples and monuments, of gold, bronze, granite and marble, of buildings in all styles, European and Asiatic, quaint originals or indifferent copies, many of them grand and massive, yet strewn over space at haphazard, on a perfectly flat surface, grouping nowhere; nowhere laid out for effect or with an eye to the picturesque. It is a town of princes, to all appearance, or of wealthy bankers or traders, with nothing mean, no back slums, no Rag-fair, the homes of the poor, if at all existing, carefully hidden out of sight; the whole covering scores of miles of ground, a maze of isles and islets, of bridges and embankments, of river and branches of river, and canal.

Theory of Meteorites.

One of the oldest theories, and he one most contistent with known facts and laws is, that meteorites are bodies moving round the sun which occasionally enter our atmosphere, and are either frittered into dust or reach the earth as aerolites. In other words, they are abnormally large fragments of comets. Small comets are dissipated in the higher regions of the air by the intense heat produced by friction, and give rise to the phenomenon of shooting stars. Larger pieces appear as fire balls, and very large masses fall through the air in a state of combustion, which is not, however, sufficiently intense to consume their volume before reaching the ground. This idea of a celestial origin seems to have originated among the Greeks. Plutarch says:

"Falling stars are, according to the opinions of some physicists, not eruptions of the ethereal fire extinguished in the air immediately after its ignition, nor yet an inflammatory combustion of air, which is dissolved in the upper regions of the space; but these meteors are rather a fall of celestial bodies, which in consequence of a certain intermission in the rotary force, and by the impulse of some irregular movement, have been hurled down not only to the inhabited portions of the earth but also beyond it into the great ocean, where we cannot find them." The views of Diogenes of Appollonia are expressed thus: "Stars that are invisible, and consequently have no name, move in space with those that are visible. These invisible stars frequently fall to the earth, and are extinguished, as the stony star that fell burning at Ægos Potamos." Dhladni, as the result of his investigations, advances the idea that meteors are bodies moving in space, being either accumulations of matter originally created, or fragments separated from a large mass of similar nature. Sir H. Davy offered the same explanation in the "Philosophical Transactions" for 1817 These views, or rather a modification of them suited to our increased knowledge of cosmical way means, have their modern advocate in Prof. H. A. Newton, of Yale College.

Snatched From the Grave.

Mrs. Helen Pharviz, No. 381 Dayton St., Chicago, Ill., is now in her sixty-eighth year, and states that she has suffered with Consumption for about ten years, was treated by nine physicians, all of them pronouncing her case hopeless. She had given up all hopes of ever recovering. Seven bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption completely cured her. Doubting ones please drop her a postal and satisfy yourselves. Sold by all druggists everywhere.

CHARCOAL FOR INFANTS.—During one of the discussions on the alimentation and diseases of infants, which occupy so much attention in France, M. Jules Guerin stated that the addition of a little charcoal (about half a teaspoonful of Belluc's or other finely powdered charcoal) to a nursing bottle full of milk exerts a most remarkable curative effect upon the diarrhœa of infants. He has repeatedly seen children, who had become exhausted by seven or eight days duration of an obstinate diarrhœa, regain all the appearance of health in two or three days. At the same time the charcoal is added, the milk should also be dilnted with a half or a third of sugared water, the children taking the mixture without any repugnance, and no vomiting being induced.

One voice all over the land goes up from mothers, that says, "My daughters are so feeble and sad, with no strength, all out of breath and life at the least exertion. What can we do for them?" The answer is simple and full of hope. One to four weeks' use of Hop Bitters will make them healthy, rosy, sprightly, and cheerful.

"When the swallows homeward fly" "When the bloom is on the rye," "And the corn is gently waving, Annie dear," "I will meet you at the gate," though it may be rather late, and the hundredth time pour tedy in your ear.

A SPRING DEFENSE.

How to Repel the Assaults of Ill Health—Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY Means Something for You.

The months of March, April and May are the three successive arches of a bridge which connect the season of ice and sleet with that of leaves and roses. No less in respect of health than of outward natural phenomena is this true. Spring is a trying season for invalids, and particularly for those who either suffer, or are liable to suffer from Biliousness, Kidney complaint and Constipation of the Bowels, and for women who are chronically subject to any of the long catalogue of physical ailments to which their delicate sex is heir. Indications of disease in spring should be heeded at once. A fatal attack may easily result from neglect or a disordered condition of the bowels. The source of prevention may be traced where cure or attempted cure may be unavailing. Are you vexed or troubled in spring with indigestion, torpid or disordered liver, want of appetite, constipation, or a feverish state of the skin? If so, take without an hour's unnecessary delay Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. No medicine is so harmless and yet so quick and positive in its action. It is Nature's own idea, condensed and made tangible by human skill. Do not leave home when going upon a journey without a bottle of it in your valise. You cannot possibly put one dollar in any other shape which it can render you so essential service. The Favorite Remedy is almost instantaneous in its action, but does not tear you to pieces with its violence nor nauseate you with disgust. It frees the liver from bile and sets the machinery of your body into normal and healthy operation. Remember, Dr. D. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. Ask your druggist for it and take nothing else. Price One Dollar a bottle.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

Miss Ada C. Sweet has been confirmed as pension agent at Chicago.

The sum of $900,000 left by a Mr. Lewis, of New York, to reduce the public debt, has been placed at the disposal of the secretary of the treasury.

A vast section of territory below Helena, Ark., has again been overflowed by the Mississippi, and Commissioner Mangum solicits relief from the government.

Five of the tariff commissioners are said to have been actually selected, the only new name being that of Alexander Mitchell of Milwaukee.

Senator Windom's committee to investigate the existence of a whisky ring to affect legislation has appointed a clerk and stenographer, and issued subpœnaes for Messrs. Atherton, of Louisville, and Shufeldt, of Chicago.

The postmaster general recommends the abolition of postage on papers and magazines. He states that merchandise rated as fourth class is carried at a loss, and if the government is to be taxed for transportation it should be on reading matter.

The senate committee on claims has reported a bill appropriating $313,169 to the heirs of R. W. Meade, of Philadelphia. That gentleman visited Spain to superintend huge commercial transactions, and was put in prison and financially ruined by the Spanish government, in 1816.

The cabinet had a protracted session Tuesday, over the tariff commission, and several names were favorably considered. It seems that Mr. Kirkwood is not eligible to appointment on the board, as he was elected a senator in the congress which passed the bill. Francis Walker, ex-superintendent of the census, Henry W. Oliver, of Pennsylvania, and John L. Hayes, of Massachusetts, will probably be members.

Mr. Ela, auditor of postoffice accounts, who is really an officer of the treasury department, refused to obey an order of the postmaster general to remove to the treasury quarters. Secretary Folger declined to interfere in the matter. By order of Mr. Howe, the auditor's room was unlocked on Wednesday evening, and his furniture, books and papers were quickly transferred to the upper floor by a hundred messengers.

It now appears to be inevitable that a long debate will take place in the senate on the bank charter bill. Every feature of the existing bank system and the probabilities of the future will be discussed. It is already taken for granted that the house bank bill will be amended by the senate and sent back to the house, where the subject will again be debated; hence the prospect is that the measure will not be passed finally by both houses till toward the end of the session.

Secretary Folger has recently had a startling experience in the engraving and printing bureau. Thursday night Professor Casilear found two of the government dies, representing the tens on the national bank notes, lying outside the safe and within the reach of the watchmen. Through Colonel Irish the dies were sent at once to Secretary Folger, who took time to satisfy himself that the event was caused wholly by carelessness. Mr. Bell, the custodian of the plates, was dismissed, and Capt. Burrows, of New York, was temporarily placed in charge of the safes.

The committee of the Society of the Army of the Cumberland having in charge the raising of funds for an erection of a monument at Washington to the memory of Gen. Garfield publishes a card of thanks to the press of the United States for the alacrity and unanimity with which was accepted the trust of becoming depositories of contributions on Decoration day. The card adds: "If the people respond with but a proportionate tithe of your kindly enthusiasm, we shall be enabled to erect such a pile as shall rightly honor the glorious name of Garfield. May 30, 1882, will be memorable as the day on which a great people united to perpetuate the memory of the soldier-president, who died at the post of duty, where he had been stationed at their command."

The senate committee on finance called Comptroller Knox before it, Wednesday, to give his views on the necessity for extending national bank charters. He said that twenty-three institutions whose charters expire during May have already gone into liquidation, and most of them are reorganizing with the same stockholders and titles. Judge Field had decided that the prolongation of a national bank would require special legislation. The banks hold $361,000,000 in United States bonds. These can remain on deposit as security for circulation should the house bill become a law; if new banks are to be organized, a large portion must be withdrawn. Of $195,000 surplus which now strengthens the system, the greater amount must be divided among shareholders should the banks be forced into liquidation.

The judiciary committee will act next on the Texas Pacific land grants. It is understood the majority, as in the case of the Northern Pacific, will be in favor of the non-forfeiture of the lands, although the minority will be larger than in the other case. Judge Poyson will ably prepare the report representing the views of the minority. He will present the minority report on the Northern Pacific, holding that the government retains the right of forfeiture. He is not clear upon the question of policy, but does not go into the discussion of this point because the attorneys for the railroads confine themselves to the argument of the question of the power to forfeit the grants. The Texas Pacific case presents other complications. In this case the right of a road to sell its grant before it has earned it is involved, and at least six of the committee are said to be of the opinion that such a transfer is not legal; that a company not building its road forfeits its grant, and can not turn over its franchise to another corporation.

Dist. Atty. Corkhill, speaking of the Guiteau case to a Star reporter, said there was only one move which Mr. Reed could make before the courts, and that was to apply for a writ of habeas corpus. He said that no court could grant a writ de lunatico inquirendo, as had been suggested might be done. Guiteau's appearance has changed considerably within a few weeks. He has lost color, and his beard has been allowed to grow. Just now he seems to put his entire dependence upon Mr. Reed, his counsel, and he seems to be confident that Mr. Reed will succeed in securing a respite, and, perhaps, a commutation of sentence; but, like Mr. Reed, he never mentions the name of Scoville, and seems to have dismissed his relatives from his mind. He is beginning to show signs of breaking down, fulfilling the predictions that have been made about him by those in charge of him at the jail. His left eye is at present very much inflamed, and the opinion of the physician is that this inflammation has been brought on by great mental and nervous excitement. He spends most of the time now lying upon the cot in his cell, and talks very little with the guards.

Since the passage of the 5 per cent. land bill in the senate on Friday last, newspapers all over the country have been freely describing it as a steal, without dwelling too long on the fact that it was passed by a most industrious arrangement of pairs to utilize doubtful absentees and a short attendance. The vote by which it passed was 22 to 17. All the eastern senators except Hale, of Maine, and all the middle state senators except Cameron, of Pennsylvania, voted no. The two exceptions were recorded in the affirmative. Mr. Miller, of New York, voted no, and Mr. Lapham, who was in the cloak-room smoking, did not come out to vote either way. The absentees numbered thirty-seven. Among the senators who voted in the affirmative was Mr. Pugh, of Alabama. Just before the regular business was taken up Monday, after the morning hour, he arose and, in admirably cautious language, remarked that the bill had been passed in the absence of many senators, and that he had voted in the affirmative so that he might be allowed to make the motion which he then made, to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. He also desired to have the bill recalled from the house, whither it had been sent. Mr. Hoar, anxious to have the Geneva award bill taken up, interfered, but Mr. Pugh held his place until he was assured that he would soon have an opportunity to present his motion and have it considered.

CONGRESSIONAL.

SENATE.

MAY 22.—In the senate, Mr. Platt opposed the house bill increasing the pension of Colonel D. C. Thomas $30 per month in excess of his grade, and it was indefinitely postponed. Mr. Miller introduced a joint resolution to authorize the president to declare martial law in Alaska. The Geneva award bill was taken up, on which Mr. Hoar addressed the senate. Mr. Garland moved a substitute for the payment of the insurance people. A communication from the secretary of war asked a special appropriation of $25,000 to dispatch a relief vessel to Lady Franklin bay. A brief executive session was held.

MAY 23.—In the senate, Mr. Logan reported a provision to be inserted in the army appropriation bill, to establish an army and navy hospital at Hot Springs, Ark. Mr. Pugh moved to reconsider the final vote on the 5 per cent. land bill, which prevailed. Mr. Groome objected to the consideration of the bill for the admission of Dakota, and it was laid aside. By a vote of 38 to 12 the Geneva award bill was passed, without amendment.

MAY 24.—In the senate Mr. Logan put through the house joint resolution appropriating $10,000,000 to supply the deficiency in army pensions. The bill for the relief of the officers and crew of the Monitor, which destroyed the rebel ironclad Merrimac, involving about $200,000, was passed.

MAY 25.—The senate passed a bill appropriating $15,000 for a lighthouse at Little Traverse harbor, Lake Michigan. The Japanese indemnity act was taken up, Mr. Morgan warmly advocating repayment and Mr. Jones arguing against any return of money.

MAY 26.—In the senate, Mr. Bayard reported a modification of the measure recently introduced by him as a substitute for the bonded spirits bill, the change referring mainly to branches and warehousing bonds. A bill was passed to provide for the removal of obstructions to free navigation, and requiring bridge companies to erect sheer booms. When the Japanese indemnity bill was taken up, Mr. Saunders moved an amendment to pay Geo. S. Fisher, consul at Kanagawa, $15,000 for the destruction of his property. Mr. Jones proposed that the president communicate with Great Britain, France, and the Netherlands, and secure their cooperation in making full restitution to Japan. An adjournment to Monday was taken.

HOUSE.

MAY 22.—In the house, Mr. Calkins called up the South Carolina contested election case. Mr. Randall moved an adjournment to Wednesday, which was lost, by 82 to 112. He then raised a question of consideration, the vote showing no quorum. A call of the house disclosed the presence of 223 members. The doors were closed, and the sergeant-at-arms was ordered to arrest absentees. He soon captured one offender, who made a speech. After another useless vote on consideration and a second call of the house, an adjournment was effected.

MAY 23.—The house resumed its struggle on the South Carolina contested election. The first vote on consideration showed seventeen less than a quorum in attendance, and the second revealed two more absentees.

MAY 24.—In the house, Mr. Calkins caused to be read extracts from a letter written by Mr. Hewitt, alleging that the elections committee refused to investigate the charges of forgery in the South Carolina contested election case. Mr. Calkins said the committee had never failed to inquire into the truth of any charge made before it, and Mr. Atherton denied the latter statement. Nearly every member was on his feet, many speaking at once. Mr. Hewitt asked an investigation of the charge of forgery, after which he promised not to participate in filibustering. A motion by Mr. Randall that the house adjourn to Friday showed that there was no quorum. A call of the house disclosed a quorum. Mr. Walker of Pennsylvania, fell to the floor in a fainting fit. After filibustering had gone on for three hours, Mr. Calkins advised members to bring five days' rations with them, and moved to adjourn, which was carried.

MAY 25.—In the house, Mr. Calkins called up the South Carolina contested election case. Mr. Randall raised a question of consideration. Mr. Kenna moved to adjourn, on which there were 133 nays and no yeas. The speaker submitted a request by Mr. Curtin for leave of absence, and Mr. Randall demanded a yea and nay vote, leave being refused by 13 to 134. Motions were then made to adjourn to Saturday and to Monday, both being lost, Ben Wood voting with the Republicans. On a motion for a recess, the vote showed no quorum, and a call of the house was ordered. At 5 o'clock a recess was taken until 8. At the evening session the galleries were well filled, and the attendance of members was larger than usual. The call of the house was several times interrupted by votes on motions to excuse members for the evening. A proposition for an adjournment to Monday received only 118 votes, less than a quorum.

MAY 26.—The house took up the South Carolina contested election cases, and Mr. Blackburn raised a question of consideration. Dilatory motions were made by Messrs. Converse, Carlisle, and Randall, and the roll was several times called. Mr. Blackburn, in order to break the deadlock, submitted a resolution that a special committee investigate the charges of irregularity in handling the testimony in the Mackey-Dibble case. The confusion then became very great, scores of members talking simultaneously, and Mr. Calkins secured an adjournment to Saturday.

MAY 27.—In the house, after several dilatory motions, Mr. Calkins obtained consent to submit a proposition to discuss the South Carolina contested election case for six hours, the house then to vote on the question of recommittal. Mr. Randall objected. Roll-calls on filibustering motions showed the lack of a quorum. Mr. Dunn introduced a petition for an appropriation of $100,000 for the relief of sufferers by the overflow of the Mississippi, accompanied by a letter from Commissioner Mangum, of Arkansas. Mr. Reed presented an amendment to the rules to limit filibustering on election cases, and the house adjourned to Monday morning.

The butcher went down to the office with the carpet-bags of both, and handed over some bloody coin to the clerk, a piece of stupidity which led to his instant arrest.

In the British house of commons, Mr. Dillon gave a pledge that no violence would result if huts were erected to save from going to the workhouse 215 families evicted from the estate of Lord Cloncurry. Railroad officials in New York report that the committee of general passenger agents in session there will recommend the abolition of the system of through trains to the west, forcing passengers to transfer from sleepers to day cars each morning. This is said to be the result of a demand by the Erie road that the through lines charge higher rates than at present, and the author of the scheme is said to be John Newell, general manager of the Lake Shore road.

On the Chicago board of trade, a committee appointed to fix the settling price of April wheat reported $1.31 as the figure at which defaulted contracts for nearly 500,000 bushels may be closed out. STONES IN THE KIDNEYS

And Bladder Expelled—Long Suffering of one of Troy's Best People—A Lucky Man.

It is by no means a strange thing that Dr Kennedy should have received the following letter. By reading it you will see in one minute why James Andrews was thankful:

TROY, N. Y., April 8th, 1880.

Dr Kennedy, Roundout, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR:—Until within a recent date I had for several years suffered greatly from gravel, called by the doctors the Brick-dust Sediment. For about a year past this sediment has not passed off in the usual quantity, but has accumulated, causing me untold pain. Having heard of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" I tried it in my case and after using about one and one-half bottles, I voided a stone from the bladder, of an oval shape, 7-16 of an inch long, and rough on its surface. I send you the largest piece that you may see of what it is composed. Since then I have felt no pain. I now consider myself cured, and cannot express my thankfulness and gratitude for so signal a deliverance from a terrible disease. You have my consent to use this letter, should you wish to do so, for the benefit of other sufferers. Yours truly,

James Andrews.

No. 10 Marshall St., Ida Hill.

When we consider that the medicine which did this service for Mr. Andrews costs only one dollar a bottle, it would seem that persons afflicted in like fashion can afford the expense of testing its virtues.
